TO KEEP THE RYE AT HOME

Ukase Issued by the German Government.

Low Tariff Advocates in Germany at Work.

A Move to Abolish the Duties on Grain so that the Poor May Have Something to Eat.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 12.—The prohibition of the export of rye is the most extreme measure of the kind adopted since the Crimean war. The Novosti says the friends of Russia will not suffer. The measure will affect only Austria and Germany, not England or France, which import only white wheat.

Discussed in Berlin.

Berlin, Aug. 12.—A great sensation was caused here by the report of the Russian ukase against exports of rye meal. Grain brokers have received private telegrams confirming the announcement. The latter, however, state that the prohibition dates from August 27, not taking effect immediately as at first reported. Even this brief respite affords much relief. Values fell somewhat on the Berlin bourse when the news was received. Some restriction of export had been foreshadowed, but the total prohibition was a great surprise.

Herr Richter and the radicals are taking advantage of this episode to renew their demands for an abolition of the German duties on grain, thus enabling the poor, with whom rye is an important article of food, to buy other grain in its place.

Rye has risen in price almost to an equality with wheat. Many newspapers join in the cry for free grain, but Chancellor Von Caprivi shows no signs of yielding to the clamor. The full effects of the Russian ukase will not be felt, however, for a few weeks. Rye cannot be obtained from other countries to take the place of the Russian product, and the rise in the prices of breadstuffs, which is certain to occur, will increase the feeling in favor of remedial measures by the government and strengthen the hands of the opposition.

Will be for Peace in Ameet

London, August 12.—The Times Berlin correspondent writes: "There is no chance of Chancellor Von Caprivis complying with the radical request for reduced grain duties." The dispatch adds that ninety per cent. of Germany's importation of rye this year has been from Russia. The ukase will seriously affect east Prussia.

Press Comment

London, August 12.—The Daily News, commenting on the Russian rye ukase, says: "It is reassuring to learn that the crops in the United States promise an exceptionally large yield. The American farmers are masters of the situation. It is to be hoped they will use their strength mercifully. The ranking of corners in the necessaries of life is never landable, and in the present juncture it would be little short of fiendish."

UP IN THE CLOUDS.

Uncle Jerry Has Doubled Up With Uncle Sam.

To Try and Regulate the Rain Storms.

The Experiment in Texas This Week.

The Sky to be Drained of Its Moisture.

Scientists Throughout the Whole World are Watching the Progress of the Enterprising American.

Washington, Aug. 12.—The civilized world will watch with a great deal of interest the experiments which are to be made in Texas this week under the auspices of Uncle Sam and Uncle Jerry Rusk, as to the practicability of producing rain by firing high explosives in the upper strata of the air.

From the time the waters receded after the great flood there have been numberless occasions when the daughters and sons of men sighed for rain.

The sight of floating clouds has been the signal for offering up prayers and supplications that they should come nearer and spread their waters upon the parching earth and withering crops.

The efficiency of this form of conjuration in this hard, materialistic age has caused an investigation into atmospheric conditions by certain persons, generally denominated "cranks," with the purpose of seeing whether clouds could not be made to disgorge their life breeding contents in spite of themselves.

People who would thus despair of divine interposition in the matter of truck gardening and field plowing might have been considered, not so very long ago either, heretical and deserving of death at the stake or scourging at the whipping post.

But now the experiments of such people are looked upon with favor. They are applauded and actually furnished with money to tamper with the clouds—something hitherto considered within the exclusive jurisdiction of divine providence.

It has in fact remained for what is popularly known as a Christian government to absolutely appropriate money secured by taxation to allow impertinent persons to see whether they could not shoot clouds in the air as the Ohio oil men shoot oil wells underneath the surface of the earth.

There have been many efforts to secure appropriation for rain producing experiments, because, as it happened, the man who exploites himself as a rain expert had not laid up any money, but it was not until the billion dollar congress convened that the legislative ear was opened.

The last congress gave $7,000 for such experiments. This amount was secured by Senator Farwell. The senator, before he became a great lawyer, was a dry goods man.

At that time, perhaps, he cared little whether we had a drouth or a flood so long as the bills of his customers were paid. But when he became a statesman he saw that he must get beyond the world of his counter and appreciating that we have a large agricultural class who are continually uneasy about the weather and their crops, he concluded that his name could be made to go sounding down the corridors of time if he could succeed in attaching his name to the first successful efforts at producing rainfall.

It may be incidentally mentioned here, though it probably has no bearing on the senator's motives, that he built a very fine capitol for the state of Texas and received in pay something like 3,000,000 acres of land in what is considered a very arid neighborhood. The senator's brother is a very devout member of the church, while the senator is rather the reverse.

The latter is essentially practical and preferred to go to the government for $7,000 for experiments in rain production rather than depend for rain on the prayers of his devout partner and brother—possibly because the thought the prayers of any one man could not at best water his 3,000,000 acres in Texas to such an extent as to make it a good agricultural country for persons seeking farms. Perhaps if the appropriation had not been tacked onto an important appropriation bill at the tail end of the session when all was excitement it would have gone down beneath the gibes and sarcasm of unbelieving congressmen. As it was they were all busy with their own affairs and the last effort of Farwell's official life was successful.

The experiments will be carried on under the supervision of the agricultural department. The department will not engage in them, but will simply stand by and if any good results follow take the credit. Uncle Jerry Rusk effects not to believe in these foolish experiments, but he is somewhat of an old fogy and his declarations need not cause perfect despair.

Jerry has lately assumed charge of the weather bureau and he's in a peck of trouble. He has become the target for all the newspaper wits. They hi-yi at him when it doesn't rain, and yell at him when it does.

He is kept awake nights by the morning papers and loses his afternoon nap on account of the afternoon papers. He is irritated and naturally protests against being saddled with any more experimental bureaus. If the attempt at rain production fails he is the man who will get all the roasting, and he knows it.

The man who is to conduct the experiments is Gen. R. D. Dyvenfurth, of this city, a hard headed man with a minimum of the crank about him who was educated in the Prussian military school and returned to this country when the war broke out to enlist in the cause of the union. His branch of service was the artillery and he served on Grant's staff. He is very sanguine of the success of the experiments, which are based on scientific principles. Concussion and atmospheric agitation is the basis of his plan. It is a fact which has been commented on repeatedly by generals for 200 years that rain followed a battle. Edward Power some years ago wrote a book on the subject, entitled "War and Weather," in which he pointed out that after 130 battles in the late war, copious rain followed.

The result of Powers' investigations convinced him that concussion would produce rain and he suggested the employment of artillery in arid regions or regions suffering from drouth. The cost of a good rain storm he estimated would be about $20,000. Showers, I presume, would not come so high.

Dyvenfurth proceeds on Powers' theory, but in a more scientific manner. He proposes to make as much noise as possible but to make it by the explosion of baloons filled with gas instead of cannon. His plan is elaborate.

The explosion will be made by means of electric sparks communicated by means of fine copper wires connecting the balloon with the ground. In addition to the balloons there will be all manner of kites in the lower altitudes, from the tails of which will depend explosives of a high character. Some of the balloons will be arranged one above the other and connected so as to explode simultaneously.

There will also be mortars on the ground to be fired. These balloons, kites and mortars will be scattered over an area of several square miles. Gen. Dyvenfurth expects to "wake" things from the ground up when he starts and to keep up the racket for several days. He will have with him Prof. Meyers and C. W. Cassell, balloonists; Dr. Rosell, chemist; Paul A. Draper, electrician, and George W. Coates, meteorologist. An ingenious arrangement has been provided by which Prof. Myers will take electrical and hygromatic observations in a balloon anchored a short distance from the scene of the atmospheric carnage. He will have telephonic communication with the earth, and thus convey to those below the information as to "how goes the battle." Gen. Dyvenfurth expects the experiments to be successful. "If I didn't," says he sententiously, "do you suppose I would give the world a chance to rail and sneer and call me a jibbering idiot and a fool?"

EDWARD BLAIR MUST HANG,

Unless Governor Campbell Interferes.

The Pardon Board Refuses to Recommend a Commutation—Other Murderers.

Columbus, O., Aug. 12.—W. J. Elliott is in the penitentiary hospital a very sick man. He was sent up from the snath shop of the Brown-Hinman works, where he had been put to work on a contract. Prison Surgeon Goersline did not think it necessary to make a close examination, but announced that he would if his illness became more serious. He said he believed it best to leave him alone now. He pronounced his illness as being due to nervous prostration.

During the morning Elliott became flighty and uttered a few words while in this condition, only some of which were audible. "Oh, my wife, what if she knew this!" was part of one of his exclamations. The hospital druggist hastened to his bedside and asked him if he desired anything. He replied that he did not. "I do not want my wife to know," said he, "that I am ill; it would nearly kill her."

When he recovers he will continue his work in the snath shop. The character of his work will be finishing hoe and scythe handles.

Attorney M. B. Earnhart appeared before the state board of pardons in the effort to secure a commutation of sentence of Ed Blair, who is sentenced to hang August 21. J. P. Bailey, democratic candidate for attorney general, represented the state. Mr. Earnhart urged upon the board the injustice of allowing Blair to hang, while Joseph Shoemaker, his accomplice, is allowed to save his life by turning state's evidence.

Miss Laura Blair, the modest and retiring young lady who came up from her home in East Monroe, Highland county, some weeks ago, has been untiring in her efforts to save her brother's life.

It did not take the board long, after hearing the arguments, to decide the case. It was voted unanimously not to interfere with the execution of the sentence, and unless Governor Campbell sets aside the recommendation of the board, which is not likely, Blair will hang on the 21st inst.

The action of the board was not made known immediately to the condemned man. The news was not broken to him, in fact, until 9:30 o'clock last evening. He was at that time engaged in a game with Craig, the negro, and two other condemned murderers. His first question was:

"What did the board do—go against me?"

"They refused to recommend a commutation of sentence," was the answer.

"That's what I expected," said the murderer, never flinching, and with a smile on his face.

"What will you do?" was asked.

"I don't see what I can do," was the answer, "except to take it like a man. I'll try to do that, sure. My sister stood by me, and that is about all the consolation I have."

And, after a few words with which he criticised the conduct of his trial as being unfair, he sauntered back to the group behind him and coolly told them of his fate.

William Fitzgerald, the Youngstown murderer, in the annex, was unusually lively to-day, and was inclined to be talkative. When the correspondent arrived, he had just concluded a letter to one of his attorneys, Frank Jacobs, at Youngstown. In this epistle he refers at some length to his case, and indulges in a few touching references to his wife. Referring to his life in the annex, this passage occurs: Here I am spoken of as the cheerfullest man in the annex. I try to brace these poor devils up by my jokes, stories and kidding. They don't suspect the hours of agony spent in my cell."

OHIO BUILDERS.

An Interesting Meeting in Cincinnati.

Three Hundred Delegates Present—A Reception and Banquet This Evening.

Cincinnati, Aug. 12.—The executive committee of the Ohio Building association league met at 10 a. m, to-day in the parlors of the Dennison house, to receive new applications for membership in the league.

At 2:30 p. m. the league was called to order at the West End Turner hall by President Winters. About three hundred delegates were present. Hon. Henry Stuve, first vice president of the league, delivered an address of welcome on behalf of the Cincinnati associations.

President Winters then delivered his annual address, which was followed by the reading of reports by Secretary Hiett and Treasurer Sturdivant, and the state executive committee.

The delegates will be given a reception and banquet at Eichler's garden to-night by the Cincinnati associations.

Thursday will be taken up with papers prepared by different members of the state, and the election of officers.

ROBBING FOR RANSOM.

Turkish Brigands Spirit Their Victims Away.

Hostages Held in the Mountains for Reward.

Death the Penalty of Failure on the Part of a Messenger to Bring Back the Money.

Constantinople, Aug. 12.—The recent spasmodic attempt of the Turkish government to suppress brigandage in Turkey and in the provinces under Turkish jurisdiction, has resulted, as have its other attemps, in a complete failure.

Another illustration of the immunity which these robbers enjoy while pursuing their vocation in the dominions of the sultan, has just been given near the scene of the recent robbery of the Oriental express at Tcheressikoi, between this city and Adrinople.

The brigands recently made a descent from their stronghold in the mountains and kidnaped a Frenchman named Raymond, who cultivated a farm near Tcheresskoi, and another named Ruffic, who was employed by Raymond as an overseer.

The two men made a desperate resistance before they yielded to the brigands, and in the struggle both of them were severely injured.

They were carried off by their captors to the mountains, where the amount of money which they must pay for their ransoms was decided upon.

As soon as the leaders of the band had settled this matter they dispatched Ruffic to Constantinople with a letter to the Count of Montebello, French ambassador to Turkey, demanding the sum of $23,000 for the release of their prisoners.

The letter stated that in the event of a refusal to pay the money, Raymond, who was still held by them as a hostage for the return of Ruffic, would be shot.

The count of Montebello immediately demanded an interview with the Sultan and urgently represented to his majesty that the Turkish government must take such measures as would secure the release of Raymond.

SOLDIER BOYS IN CAMP.

The Second Regiment at Bowling Green.

Annual Reunion of Soldiers and Sailors.

Major McKinley Present—An Interesting Address During Which Politics Was Not Mentioned.

Bowling Green, Aug. 12.—(Special)—The largest crowd for years is in Bowling Green to-day, and the attractions are many. The Second Regiment, O. N. G., is in camp, but the special attractions today were the ninth annual reunion of the Soldiers' and Sailors' association of Wood county, and the presence of Major McKinley.

Gov. Campbell was invited to be present but owing to pressing engagements failed to arrive.

Major McKinley arrived at noon from Toledo, and after being met at the depot was driven to the Ross house where he was tendered a reception.

The grand parade of the Second regiment and the association occurred at 10 o'clock, and was a very creditable one in every respect.

The Second regiment has more men in camp than ever before and the Soldiers' association had a big representation in line.

After the parade the program as previously arranged was carried out. The Glee club opened with a song, after which Rev. W. H. Scoles offered prayer.

The address of welcome was made by A. B. Murphy and the response by Rev. John Tenney.

The business portion of the reunion was then transacted after which a bounteous basket dinner was partaken of.

Major McKinley was driven to the grounds at 2:30 o'clock and delivered an address to the veterans. His speech was confined entirely to reminiscences of the war and the condition of the country and the veterans of the war since its close. He spoke for an hour and a half.

The reunion was one of the most successful ever had by the association in every respect.

The Second regiment, under command of Col. Howe, is camped on the Fair grounds and the camp is known as Camp Wood. The boys are having a good time and are doing plenty of hard earnest work.

The long roll is looked for to-night.

TO RUN THEM DOWN.

Officers After the Crooked Loan Officers.

Tollman and Downing Throw Up Their Hands and Aid the Officers.

Chicago, Aug. 12.—Tollman and Downing, the officers of the "National Capital Savings, Building, and Loan Association of North America," who were arrested yesterday, have thrown up their hands, and are doing all in their power to aid the government officials in straightening out the concern's accounts. It seems possible that both men will go free, as evidence so far gathered indicates that they were more duped than guilty. Attorney Linden Evans, who has been investigating the "association's" method, has carefully examined the books and has prepared the following statement showing the receipts of the "firm": total received, $86,000; paid to local agents, $31,000; loans and cash in bank, $13,000; Mortimer's commissions, $19,000; total, $63,000; to be accounted for, $23,000.

Postoffice inspectors are looking for W. F. Mortimer, the secretary and treasurer, and F. A. Wentworth, brother-in-law of Louis Mortimer, the general manager. Warrants were issued for their arrest today, but the men have not been found. Postoffice Inspector Stewart was in receipt of several dispatches from different parts of the country this evening asking that letters they sent the association be sent back to them.

HUNTING A NEGRO FIEND.

If Found There Will Be no Need of a Trial.

Roslyn, L. I., Aug. 12.—Mrs. Frederick Niemeyer, wife of Constable Niemeyer of Great Neck, was assaulted by a colored man Monday, and now lies at her home prostrated from the effects of her terrible experience.

Mrs. Niemeyer was on her way to the station at Thompson on that day, when she was accosted by a negro at a lonely place. The woman tried to hurry away but the negro seized her and putting one hand over her mouth, smothering her cries, dragged her into the woods.

He kept her there over three hours, maltreating her in a frightful manner. Becoming tired of his amusement the fiend produced a razor and placing the edge against Mrs. Niemeyers breast, compelled her to swear that she would not expose him. He then fled.

Mrs. Niemeyer recognized her assailant as John Aman, a farm hand. He has disappeared. Parties of citizens are scouring the country in search of the villain and he will be strung up to the nearest tree when captured.

World's Fair Gossip.

Chicago, Aug. 12.—Herbert Baxter Adams has declined the appointment of chief of the departments of liberal arts. The place was tendered to him a month ago by Director General Davis, who had received positive assurances that Dr. Adams would take it. Yesterday Col. Davis received a letter from Dr. Adams saying that he could not qualify. Inability to devote all of his time to the department is understood to be the cause of his refusal to qualify.

Dr. Selam Peabody, ex-president of the Illinois university, will probably be appointed to fill the vacancy.

The World's Y. M. C. A.

Amsterdam, Aug. 12—The twelfth conference of the Young Men's Christian associations of all lands began its sessions in this city to-day. Delegates are present from America and nearly every country in the world. After prayer and the opening addresses the nomination of officers and committees was proceeded with.

DEMOCRATS IN LINE.

National Executive Committee Meeting.

A Strong Organization to be Perfected—The Club is the Thing in Politics.

New York, Aug. 12.—The executive committee of the National Association of Democratic clubs met here yesterday and decided to hold the next national convention of the association 60 days after the national democratic convention.

Chairman Welch gave an account of his tour to the far northwest. He stated that the direct result of the establishment of clubs in Utah was the election of the democratic ticket and the almost entire absorption of the Mormon vote.

The finest and most complete organization in any state was in the new state of Washington. Indeed, it is in the northwest that the work of proselyting would be most actively carried on thorugh means of the club organization.

It has been decided to organize a missionary itineracy composed of 15 of the leading democratic orators connected with the national association. The party will leave the city of Washington, D. C., on September 12, and will make a complete circuit of the northwest, stopping one day at Chicago. From there they will go direct to Helena, Mont., and there organize a league of democratic societies for that state.

They will reach Spokane Falls in time for the state convention of clubs. Among the speakers will be several candidates for the speakership. Congressman Bynum, of Indiana, has already been settled on as one of the party; also Senator Kenna, of West Virginia, and Chauncey F. Black, president of the National association.

The committee has appointed correspondents in every county in the United States. Each county will be assessed the sum of $10 for the support of the order and the propogation of democratic doctrine through the club organization.

Questions of party policy were warmly discussed and the silver question came in for a heated debate among the members. The committee are sorely divided on this point, but it was decided that the tariff would be made the leading feature in the south and west.

AGAIN UNDER ARREST.

Guenther Once More Behind the Bars.

A Man's Liberty Twice in Jeopardy for the Same Offense at Dayton.

Dayton, O., Aug. 12.—Public interest in the Guenther poisoning case, which has not slumbered since the acquittal on Saturday last of Henry Guenther, who was charged with having murdered his wife by means of arsenical poisoning, was intensified last night by the re-arrest of the accused on the same charge, the only difference being that the allegation of the affidavit upon which the arrest was made now specifies mercurial poisoning instead of arsenical, as in the former instance.

Mrs. Sophia Guenther, wife of the accused, died July 10, under circumstances so mysterious that the friends of the woman determined to investigate as to the causes of her death. Accordingly an autopsy was held, the result of which was the announcement that the deceased had died from acute enteritis.

The physicians who attended her during her illness attributed her death to a complication of diphtheritic and other ailments. However, in order to satisfy the friends of the woman, who still demanded a thorough investigation, a chemical analysis was made, with the result that the heart, liver, spleen, kidneys, lungs, and other organs of the deceased were found to be permeated with arsenic.

In accordance with the discovery, the acting coroner delivered a finding to the effect that the deceased came to her death from the effects of arsenical poison, presumably administered by her husband. Guenther was immediately arrested on the charge of murder, but at the preliminary hearing of the case he was dismissed, owing to the testimony of the embalmer, who said that the embalming fluid which he had injected contained arsenic in large quantities.

The abrupt and unexpected termination of the case caused great surprise, and it was evident that the public, owing to the circumstance and the notoriety of the man, were not satisfied with the verdict.

Since that time the prosecuting attorney has been at work on the case, and has discovered new evidence, which led to the arrest of Guenther on the old charge. Although the officials are reticent as yet concerning the new developments, it may be inferred from what is known and told above that the prosecution is in possession of facts more damaging than those upon which Guenther was first held.

In fact it is given out that it is known where and by whom the mercury was procured, which, it is claimed, was administered to the woman. Guenther pleaded not guilty on an arraignment before Magistrate Elliff. He was remanded to await hearing Tuesday, August 18.

OHIO PHOTOGRAPHERS.

An Interesting Gathering in Columbus.

Columbus, Aug. 12.—The Ohio photographers are closing their two days session here. This association was originally styled the Photographers' Association of Northwestern Ohio, but at the meeting held last April at Lima it was resolved to form a state organization to be known as the Photographers' Association of Ohio, and the object to be to secure a more fraternal and social feeling among the photographers of the state, the improvement and general advancement of the art and the securing of more renumerative and uniform prices.

A committee to revise the constitution and by-laws was appointed at the Lima meeting, to report at this meeting, after the adoption of which a new set of officers will be elected.

In addition to the foregoing other work calculated to be beneficial to the membership and for the advancement of the art will come before the meeting and be disposed of.

Any photographer in the state having had one year's practical experience as such and being a bona fide citizen of the state, or any person dealing in photographic supplies in the state, is eligible to membership.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

His Death at an Early Hour To-Day.

Boston, Aug. 12.—James Russell Lowell died at 2:10 this morning. He died at his home, "Elmwood," in Cambridge, where he was born February 22, 1819.

Since his return from the English mission Mr. Lowell put out his latest work, "Democracy, and Other Addresses," a

He spent most of his declining years with his daughter, Mrs. Burnett, at Deerfoot farm, Southborough, Mass., and with his grandchildren, whom he adored. Here he did his last literary work. Almost to the last he was a hard though erratic worker. He had not been seen so often in society of late years as formerly, but up to five years ago he seemed in robust health. The immediate cause of death was liver complaint.

Good Rate.

The steamship G. G. Hadley, of Toledo, arrived at Buffalo yesterday with a big load of grain from Duluth, on which she got 3½ cents, the highest rate paid this year.

Change in Lights.

Notice is given that on or about September 1, 1891, the present flashing light of the fifth order, at Tawas (Ottawa) light station, Lake Huron, Michigan, will be changed to an occulting light of the fourth order, showing a fixed light for twenty-five seconds, succeeded by an eclipse of five seconds. The light will show red between S. W. and N. W., to cover the shoal to the westward of the light house, and will show white through the remainder of the arc.

Two Vessels Ashore.

Escanaba, Aug. 12.—Two vessels are reported ashore on North Fox island. The tugs Sumner and Kate Winslow have gone to them. It is thought they are the Maggie Duncan and Potts, which cleared from here with ore cargoes Sunday night.

Will Appeal the Case.

Chicago, Aug. 12.—Stewart Murry, agent of the Lehigh Valley line, said that Capt. McFarlane's case would be appealed. The owners of dock property hold that the right to unload vessels at their docks is one which the city cannot take away and that the harbormaster has no legal authority to interfere with vessels loading or unloading on private property. To this view many vessel men agree and the question, which has become a very important one on the river, will now go into the courts.

Released from Grosse Point.

Detroit, Aug. 12.—The steamer Colgate Hoyt, with a broken wheel, was towed down from the Soo river by the Bartlett which also has the barge 55 in tow. The Hoyt will be taken to Cleveland.

The steamer Panther grounded at Grosse point Monday night, but released herself yesterday noon.

Snags.

The schooner Prussia loaded by the Wheeling & Lake Erie at the Ironville docks with coal for Pt. Edward; cleared to-day.

The schooner Zapotec, injured about two weeks ago in collision with the schooner John Shaw, is in Port Huron and will be surveyed to-day. Capt. William Morris will represent the underwriters. A rough estimate places her damage at $3,000.

It is the intention of Capt. Freer to prosecute the officers of the Chicago Seamen's union criminally for boycott and conspiracy. They will not allow seamen to ship on the schooner H. H. Badger, and keep delegates watching the vessel night and day.

CARLISLE FOR CLEVELAND

No Other Democrat as Strong With the People.

Possibilities of the Next Presidential Campaign.

Republicans Will Be the Losers by the Third Party Movement—No Democratic State Can Be Captured by It.

Narragansett Pier, R. I., Aug. 12.—A little shingled cottage on the level space in front of the Casino, a typical creation, is occupied by the senate sub-committe on the working of the tariff system.

During the past three weeks a vast amount of work has been done there by Senators Aldrich, Harris, Allison and Carlisle.

In discussing the political situation today, Senator Carlisle said:

"The Farmers' alliance is a gradual atrophy, a marasmus which indicates that the organization will not, in all probability, be a serious factor in the election next year.

"The alliance vote in Kentucky was less than 20,000. I can see no danger to democratic success from the alliance.

"The only states which it can by any probable chance carry are Kansas, and perhaps Nebraska and Colorado. The democracy will lose nothing.

"The movement in the south is substantially a unit in course already. This is a spectre which confronts the white man in the southern states—a shadow of negro supremacy.

"Rather than have negro domination, the whites will bury political differences and unite at the polls in order to prevent that which they regard as a greater evil.

"I do not quite understand the alliance movement in Ohio.

"The democratic candidate may not be helped by the third ticket, but between now and election day difficulties may be smoothed over.

"I regard the presence of a third party ticket in the field in '92 as contingent. Suppose the republicans nominate Harrison—pronouncedly anti-silver in his belief—and the democrats place Cleveland at the head of their ticket. Mr. Cleveland has placed himself on record against free coinage.

"The third party people would then be between the horns of a dilemma. Probably they would have a ticket of their own. The losses would generally be greater to the republicans than to the democrats.

"In some states the democrats would lose, but there is no democratic state that would be turned over to its enemies.

"On the other hand a third ticket would endanger one or more republican states, and, perhaps, throw the presidential election into the house of representatives, which will be democratic.

"If either one of the great parties were to nominate a man who is disposed to coquet with the free silver people he would attract the alliance vote—as much of it as remains."

Speaking of the probable candidates for the presidency in '92 Mr. Carlisle said:

"The republicans will nominate President Harrison if Mr. Blaine will not consent to stand.

"The influence of the ladies of his family may deter Mr. Blaine, but there is a tremendous pressure upon him from his old party friends to run.

"He would sweep the convention, I think. No republican is as strong as Blaine. I do not think he will consent to run.

"Mr. Cleveland, in my judgment, is still the strongest democratic candidate. He may have offended the extreme pro-silver men by his remarks against free coinage, but he enjoys a wonderful reputation among the people.

"The plain, every-day folks in the west and south swear by him. I know of no democrat who enjoys the confidence of the people as does Mr. Cleveland."

IN THE SUPREME COURT.

The Lawyers Have a Polish Case to Deal With.

Telegraph Wires Break While Transmitting the Names—Other Cases Filed.

Columbus, O., Aug. 12.—A case which is probably without a parallel for jawbreaking names was filed in the supreme court yesterday, coming up on error from Cuyahoga county, and Joseph Golombieski is defendant, and the list of plaintiffs includes some fifteen or twenty "owskis," a few "ideos," a Tuckowicz, and a Hmielicke, with a Togorzevski thrown in for seasoning.

Joseph, it appears, was a member of the Polskie Rzpmsko-Katolichis Towarzyst wo Najsw Serca Jezusowego, which is alleged to mean in United States the Polish Roman Catholic Society of the Holiest Heart of Jesus. The society is devoted to religious and charitable purposes, and has sick and death benefits, to support which the members pay annual dues and assessments. Joseph, however, didn't pay his dues to the Poobah of the "Owskis," so he was expelled without useless waste of explanation from his alphabetical brethren. When he afterwards attempted to attend and take part in the meetings he was forcibly ejected from the "Owski" headquarters.

Thereupon Joseph brought suit against the society and recovered $19 damages to sooth his lacerated feelings. The defendants were not satisfied with the verdict and have brought the case and their names as well to the attention of the supreme court.

The case of Nora J. Tobias against Daniel M. Tobias, error to circuit court of Crawford county, has reached the supreme court. The litigation grows out of a divorce and alimony case which is now pending in that county, and involves the sum of $324.

James S. Kirk & Company against the Ohio Valley Insurance company, of Cincinnati, is the title of a case filed in the supreme court which is a relic of the great Chicago fire. Kirk & Company, who were soap manufacturers, lost heavily by the fire, and were insured in the Ohio Valley company. In settling up the affairs of the insurance company, the Kirk claim was lost and they entered suit to recover the face of their policy. None of the lower courts have sustained their claim.

Must Pay the Assessments.

Philadelphia, August 12.—Yesterday was the last day on which the stockholders of the Keystone bank could pay their assessment as levied by Comptroller Lacey. Only 26 out of nearly 200 stockholders paid the assessment. Out of the aggregate amount which was $500,000, only $27,000 has been paid to Receiver Yardley. He will immediately bring suit against those who failed to pay the assessment.

The Russian Persecutions.

The New York Mail and Express is responsible for a cablegram that Russia is now persecuting Methodists, who are being robbed, imprisoned and banished. The text, with much valuable information, will be brought before the meeting on behalf of the persecuted Jews at Adams street Mission hall, to-night at 8 p. m. Rev. O. D. Fisher in the chair.

HAVE STRUCK THEIR TENTS

The Sixteenth Regiment On Its Way Home.

Soldier Boys Glad to Get Back to the City.

Some Splendid Shooting at the Annual Tournament—Gossip from Camp McPherson.

Camp McPherson, Huron, O., Aug. 11.—(Special correspondence),—How gloriously glorious is an outing in the form of an encampment, for three or possibly four days, but how tiresome it does become after that time. The tents cease to have that inviting look they had when the regiment came with colors flying, drums beating and the golden prospect of a week's outing. The once well-filled ticks have taken unto themselves the flabby and hollow look of an exploded foot ball. The grass don't look as green and pretty as it did and as for the parade ground, with the beautiful hills and gullies around it, why it is absolutely abomnable. The only really welcome looking places are the dining tables at meal time. The boys have signed the muster rolls now, and that has a great deal to do with changing the aspect of the place. A good many have sold their pay, usually getting $5 cash for the six in prospectus; that is gone, all gone and nothing lends to destroy the beauties of a place as does being busted.

Every one supposed that camp would be broken on Tuesday morning and when the word was given out that the regiment would remain until Wednesday there was no little kicking. But the powers that be say Wednesday and Wednesday goes.

Last night the camp was unusually quiet. The only thing that caused any excitement at all was in the earlier part of the evening, when a big country man was bent on licking a blue coat and started in on a company F. boy. Before he had worked himself up to a sufficiently high passion, a small detachment of company Q. put in an appearance and the gentleman was gently ushered over the Rhine. The word that a gang of countryman were out for a rough time, fired the blood of the whole comple ment of men in company Q and they scoure l the woods in the vicinity of the camp, "called over the "Rhine." But their search was a vain one.

From that hour until one o'clock the only sounds were the "what you got," and "that's good," which issued from the dimly lighted tents.

The Sixteenth Regiment Band, of Napoleon, gave one of their delightful concerts in front of headquarters in the early part of the evening. This musical organization is par excellent at concert work. Under the leadership of Professor Frederick J. Adams they have reached a position second to none in northwestern Ohio. The class of music they play is the highest, and as far as their instrumentation goes, it is perfect. On every hand they are highly complimented and their various renditions are vociferously applauded. Their drum major, Robert Dittenhover, is simply a little phenomenon. He throws the stick beautifully and is one of the drawing cards of the organization.

Sunday evening, Col. C. H. Davis, of Findlay, Maj. A. M. Dildine, of Fostoria, and Adjt. G. W. Cunningham, of Fostoria, came into camp and ate supper with Capt. Bulger of company H. They are here to make final preparations for the encampment of the Ninth regiment, uniformed rank K. P., which will encamp here at Sage's Grove for a week. They will go into camp Wednesday, August 12. There will be about 200 in camp; among the number will be a great many ladies.

Friday they intend to give a very swell dress ball, invitations having been sent to nearly every uniformed rank in Ohio.

During the dress parade yesterday Lieut. Laugel, of company E, and Private Morrison, of company H, were overcome by heat and were compelled to leave the ground. They are all right now.

Ray Heller, an alto player in the band, came down to camp with a very foxy red cap and sash snugly packed away in his trunk. He unfurled the sash and donned the cap, and ever since the cry has come up from every company he passes, "We want that pretty hat and sash," and the imitations of turkey gobblers are heard on every side.

There is considerable speculation going the rounds now regarding the election of a colonel to succeed the present incumbent, Col. Keyes. Two candidates have been mentioned, exclusive of Col. Keyes, who is a candidate for re-election. They are Major Lemmon and Lieut.-Col. Busker. No expression of opinion could be ascertained from the commanders of companies, and the companies themselves are almost evenly divided, with Col. Keyes a favorite. His term of office expires June next. He has made a most exemplary officer and stands well with rank and file. On September 7 or thereabouts, the commission of Senior Major Lemmon expires. The only one mentioned for the place is the major himself.

The annual shoot for the regimental badge took place yesterday. The badge to be shot for is a beautiful gold emblem now possessed by Company E, of Bryan.

The badge was purchased by popular subscription among the members of the regiment. This was about three years ago. Company B won it first and Company E since then. There were two distances to shoot, 200 yards and 300 yards, and the highest possible score to make was 125.

The squad scores is as follows for the 200 yard distance:

Company C	55
" I	65
" A	52
" E	95
" B	67
" H	61
" F	46
" D	75

For the 300 yard distance the score was as follows:

Company C	44
" I	45
" A	14
" E	92
" B	100
" H	68
" F	57
" D	79

Company B will therefore hold the medal a year. The score made by the company is considered to be an excellent one, in fact the best score ever made in the national guard. Company B's quarters were the scene of great rejoicing. Capt. Barker's face wore a large and fine looking smile—the captain will wear the badge. The presentation will be made to-morrow.

The field and staff officers, with their ladies, chartered a local yacht and took a couple of hours sail.

Athletics occupied a good deal of attention Monday afternoon. It was too warm for battalion drill, so the boys in A company and B company were trying their skill at high kicking and kindred sports.

Charles Hagus, of F company, was detected in the act of going through the camp at a double quick, Monday afternoon, and Capt. Reynolds came near fainting.

There has been a dearth of maidens in the camp. When the boys came there were rumors of excursions and picnics. They all proved to be myths. There is a fine dance hall on the grounds but not a dance.

There is some talk of having a shooting contest to-morrow between the commissioned and non-commissioned officers for a medal. The emblem will be given by Colonel Keyes, with the stipulation that if the commissioned officers win, the colonel shall wear the badge. The distance to shoot will be 300 yards.

Alonzo Dittenhover and Mr. Kennedy, of Ashtabula, were the guests of Capt. C. E. Reynolds, of Co. F, yesterday.

Captain Bulger's wife has been quite ill all day to-day.

Rain Experiments.

Chicago, Aug. 12.—The Hon. C. B. Farwell to-day received a telegram from Prof. Dyhreufurth, in charge of the rain producing experiments provided for by the last congress, now being conducted on the ranch of Nelson Morris of this city, in Texas. The professor says that the first experiment was made yesterday, powder being exploded high in the air; that clouds soon after began to gather and that it rained heavily there to-day.

SENSATION AT VAN WERT.

A Girl's Sudden Death Has Caused an Arrest.

Van Wert, O., Aug. 12.—(Special)—On Saturday night Mary Haltry, aged 17, employed in Kinney's hotel at Scott, this county, died suddenly and it was given out that her ailment was typhoid pneumonia.

However, a physician, without authority of law, was called to perform a post mortem.

A brother of the girl heard of the circumstance and called the coroner.

His investigation is now proceeding and reveals a revolting case.

The dead girl would have been a mother in a few months.

Dr. Sommers had charge of the case and John Kinney, proprietor of the hotel, was nurse.

Kinney shipped his trunks north but was caught here and imprisoned.

A warrant is out for the arrest of Dr. Sommers.

Did Not Pan Out Well.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 12—The fifth annual convention of the International association of factory inspectors was begun here to-day with rather a slim attendance. The convention is expected to last three or four days and will be devoted to the discussion of papers relative to the condition of labor in the factories throughout the country. President Wade, of Boston, delivered his annual address, during the opening session. He will probably be re-elected his own successor.

Into an Open Switch.

Norwalk, Conn., Aug. 12.—A freight train on the Danbury and Norwalk branch of the Housatonic railroad going at a high speed ran upon an open switch at Sanford's station this morning. The depot was demolished. The locomotive was somewhat damaged. Five loaded cars were wrecked. The wreckage blocked the track for two hours.

Henry McGuffin Dead.

Mansfield, O., Aug. 12—Henry McGuffin, aged 60, for a number of years fireman at the water works in this city, died at his home last night of paralysis. Deceased was for years canvass man of John Robinson's circus, and his wife was the leading bare-back rider of the same show. His wife survives him.

Famine and Pestilence.

Vienna, Aug. 12.—Famine and pestilence have followed the excessive rains in the Magura district of the Carpathian mountains. The wet weather ruined the crops, and insufficient and improper food has caused typhus fever and dysentery to prevail.

Fifty-Seven Years an Odd Fellow.

Result of the Strike.

London, August 12.—The semi-annual report of the London omnibus company shows a decrease of £17,000 in net receipts during the past six months which is attributed mainly to the recent strike.

Died at 91.

London, Aug. 12.—Very Rev. Gilbert Elliott, D. D., is dead, at the age of 91 years. He has been dean of Bristol since 1850.

THE EMPEROR'S HEALTH.

A Paris Paper Startles the World By Its News.

Fears that His Rheumatism May Reach His Heart.

Herr Miguel Says that the Regent Who Would Succeed the Emperor Is Wholly Incompetent to Fill the Place.

Paris, Aug. 12.—The Gaulois has startled all France and Germany by printing the following from Berlin:

Berlin, Aug. 11.—William the Second arrived Sunday at Kiel on board the Hohenzollern, which at present he is unable to leave. The emperor's condition is much more grave than has been admitted, for not only does he suffer from his knee-joint and his ear trouble, but terribly severe rheumatic pains absolutely nail him down to his chair and will compel him to remain utterly inactive for at least a fortnight, without the least prospect of stirring.

The doctors, while stating that the alarming news which has been circulated is exaggerated, say that if the emperor continues to refuse to submit himself to the treatment prescribed, the rheumatism must soon assume a more serious aspect and attack the heart.

For the moment he is quite unable to undertake any work, and it is thought that his stay at Kiel may benefit him if he keeps to the regime laid down. But they fear that his ardent temperament will not resign itself to enforced repose.

There is much anxiety as to the condition of the emperor, and uneasiness is felt as to what will be the outcome should his disease have a fatal ending.

These thoughts are all the more reasonable as the emperor does not husband his resources and will surely continue his series of fatiguing journeys and duties as soon as the first sign of improvement begins to be felt.

"If William II. were to die," said Herr Miguel, the German minister of finance, "Germany would be in a most unenviable position. The crown would revert to a child 7 years old, and the nation would have to appoint as regent Prince Henry of Prussia, the emperor's brother; but Prince Henry is a sailor, and his friends are only sailors, scarcely known to the public. His hand could not for a moment hold the mane of the German lion."

His reply to some one who mentioned the name of Bismarck was pat:

"How little is known of the real Bismarck! To recall him to Berlin would be simple madness. Bismarck is in truth very old, and the deprivation of power has broken him, so that there cannot be imagined a more painful position than his present one. Speaking less than ever, flying into a passion at the veriest trifles and making life unbearable to those who surround him, Bismarck is done.

"And it is not on him that we must count hereafter in our hours of trial.

"The worst of it is that it is almost impossible to say on whom we can count in such a case, and, further, it is precisely this which makes the present position of the empire so precarious."

The above conversation as repeated here is said to be the resume of a conference between Gen. Von Caprivi and Herr Miguel.

Here is the other side of the question: Others say that in the event of Henry of Prussia becoming regent his first step would be the reinstatement of Prince Bismarck in the chancellorship—in fact, Prince Henry is one of the most ardent admirers of the exchancellor, whose recall would, in addition, be insisted upon by the Germans, who would consider the unity of the empire at stake if its founder did not come to the rescue.

Now, Bismarck's first act would be to bring about a reconciliation between Germany and Russia. On the other hand, he would take strong measures to revive the laws against socialists, and he is hardly the man who would in any way diminish the present martial law that weighs down the people of Alsace and Lorraine.

It is an absolute fact that the emperor cried with pain when he was moved; that his ear trouble is increasing and causes frequent epileptic fits, which are recurring at shorter intervals and with greater intensity than ever before; so that most serious apprehensions are entertained as to the result throughout the German empire.

ARGUED WITH A GUN.

A Woman and a Revolver at Findlay —Small Fire.

Findlay, O., Aug. 12.—(Special)—Howe's old planing mill, near the Big Four depot, and used as a paint factory, was completely gutted by fire yesterday. The building was not very valuable but the contents were. The loss will be about $3,500. Partially insured.

A shooting affray which may result seriously occurred over on Walnut street. It seems Charley Fox has been paying some attention to a young woman by the name of Taylor and thus neglected his married friend, Mrs. Chance. She armed herself with a revolver and started out after him.

Meeting him she first chastised him for neglecting her and then opened fire on him. One shot went through the muscle of the left arm, the second through the flesh of the right arm near the shoulder, and the third and most serious in the right side above the hip.

The woman was promptly arrested, and will be held to see the result of her shooting.

Perry Adams Ill—Fearfully Scalded.

Tiffin, Aug. 12.—(Special)—State Senator Perry W. Adams is dangerously ill at his residence in this city, his affliction being neuralgia of the heart combined with inflammation of the kidneys.

A 2-year-old daughter of Thomas Runyan, residing northeast of the city, has been fatally scalded by the overturning of a vessel of boiling water.

ARMS FOR THE REBELS.

Plenty of Fighting Material on Hand.

The Congressional Party Improves Its Opportunities and Gets Up a Little Battle.

Iquique, July 14.—The congressional steam transport Maipo anchored here on the 3d inst. after 45 days' absence. She brought a large supply of munitions of war, including 75 Krupp guns of different caliber and 12,000 magazine rifles, with a plentiful supply of ammunition for all.

It is not known where they were embarked, but there is little doubt they were transferred from a European steamer near the Falkland Islands, the greatest care being taken to prevent a repetition of the Itata fiasco.

The Maipo rigged up an extra smoke stack to prevent detection by Balmaceda's ships. The arms were at once served out to the troops and an expedition left without delay to attack the government forces concentrated in and around Coquimbo.

Heavy fighting ensued on the 9th, and the government troops are reported to have had the advantage until night set in, when they were outgeneraled by the congressionalists. Darkness, however, prevented a decisive victory. The government troops are said to have retired further south.

"El Nacional," congressional organ, came out yesterday with a scathing article against the United States Minister Egan, who, in a letter addressed to the Iquique Junta, expressed the opinion that it was impossible for them to overthrow Balmaceda. This incident, along with the Itata business, has caused bitter feeling against the United States. Mr. Egan's letter and the reply of Minister Errarzuriz are also published.

A Runaway Hoosier Husband's Cruel Leave-Taking.

Indianapolis, Aug. 12.—Charles Ott, real estate dealer, is absent under circumstances indicating he may have gone for good. Before leaving he closed his real estate deals, and his wife, with five children, was given $1, while it is supposed he had at his command $10,000.

Even the homestead is found to have been deeded to his sister as far back as 1883, while the only thing in sight is a piece of property on which he placed a mortgage of $1,200, which mortgage his wife did not sign. Her interest therein may yield a few hundred dollars.

Died in Iowa.

Kent, O., Aug. 12.—Mrs. Mary B. Hart, mother of John Hart, of this place, died in Council Bluffs, Ia., Sunday. She was 81 years of age, and formerly resided here. The remains were brought here this morning and the funeral held at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon.

Colima in Eruption.

Colima, Mexico, Aug. 12.—At 6:30 o'clock yesterday morning the volcano of Colima began to show signs of an eruption, and after a time the whole city became covered with ashes. This is the most extensive eruption ever known here, and there are fears that a great many lives will be lost.

Obliged to Leave Rome.

Rome, Aug. 12.—Owing to the depression of trade and the high cost of living in Rome many families are abandoning the city as a place of residence. It is estimated that 5,000 persons have migrated or emigrated during the past three months.

THE CANADIAN SENSATION.

More Officials May Follow Langevin.

Charges of Corruption and the Accepting of Bribes to an Alarming Extent.

Ottawa, Ont., Aug. 12.—Sir Hector Langevin's sudden determination to resign has caused a big sensation here. His step was completely unexpected.

It is said that Hon. Thomas McGreevy would also resign.

The resignation of Sir Hector Langevin has proved to be a veritable bombshell in political circles. It was totally unexpected at this stage of the proceedings, and is the absorbing topic of conversation here.

At the meeting of the committee on privileges and elections Sir Hector read a long paper in defense of himself. He said he would preface it with the statement that he had resigned in justice to his colleagues in parliament and the committee.

His statement was very voluminous. He denied emphatically the truth of all the charges preferred against him and asserted his innocence in the most positive manner. It was absolutely untrue, he declared, that he had ever received $10,000 from Owen E. Murphy; likewise he had had no relations whatever with Murphy. He was not aware that his son, Laforce Langevin, had received a cent, either directly or indirectly.

He contended that his work was perfectly honorable and that there had been no manipulation of public contracts. In support of each assertion he quoted documents which he considered irrefutable truth of his innocence.

With regard to Mr. Pitus, who said he gave Sir Hector $10,000 in 1887, the minister said he had no recollection of the alleged transaction, even if the payment was made for election purposes, as Mr. Pitus had declared under oath.

It must be remembered, pointed out Sir Hector, that this alleged occurrence took place six years after Mr. Pitus had ceased to perform work for the public works department. Sir Hector reviewed all the evidence in a comprehensive manner. He denied that he had ever profited by any contracts and said that he never had private dealings with Larkin, Connelly & Co., contractors, or anybody else, incousistent with his position as a minister of the crown.

At the meeting of the committee on public accounts it was shown in the examination of witnesses from the printing bureau that $10184 worth of paper had been got in November, 1885, from the New England Paper company, which had been ordered by Hon. J. A. Chapleau, and that the account was certified by him.

Mr. Chapleau said that if Mr. Lister intended to prove cognizance on his part of wrong doing in connection with this paper order and the La Presse matter, he hoped he would do it through the house and not through the committee. He was prepared at any time to face the charge.

BY PATRIOTIC WOMEN.

Objects of the Society to Foster National Pride.

About the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Mrs. William D. Cabell, First Vice President, Details Some Interesting Facts Connected With the Society.

Washington, August 11.—"The name of the Daughters of the American Revolution, an association of earnest and patriotic women; commends itself to every heart which beats national pride and gratitude to 'those great ones' who laid in blood and sorrow the foundations upon which national pride in this country must rest," so Mrs. William D. Cabell, vice president of the society expressed herself yesterday. "It is not daughters of the Revolution, be it noted, that these women call themselves," she continued. "The right of revolution is a great right and men may well proclaim themselves revolutionists in the desire to stamp their disapproval of wrong and their zeal, at all hazards, to uphold the right. But these ladies are associated in thought and feeling with no revolution but one. The blood-stained uprising in France, Mexico, and the South American Republics may have been necessary, may have done and may yet do great good in their time and generation.

"But this society is identified only with that one immortal struggle which has set its seal upon the regeneration of mankind. Its objects are noble and as modest as its name. They contemplate no intrusion into the active walks of men. The society has connected itself with no other organization of women. It stands alone, inviting into its membership all good women belonging to every section of the country who can show an unquestioned descent from the brave and wise men who founded the Republic.

"It is purely American in its material and its organization. It has avoided distinctive state organizations in order to maintain in perfection its national character. State pride is a good, a noble thing, but we hold that love of country is better. My heart will be cold ere it ceases to throb at the name of my native Virginia, but it is not as a Virginian that I identify myself with the Daughters of the American Revolution. The honor of Vermont is dear to her daughters as to her sons, but the descendent of the Green Mountain boys must forget even those Green Mountains when she clasps hands with sister women from every portion of this great country which Virginians and Vermonters fought and died to found.

"The mission of the society is to nourish that sentiment of loyalty which, flaming out among men in the hour of action, lies dormant and often despised in times of peace; that sentiment which is to the body politic as that salt which, 'if it shall lose its savor, the whole body becomes corrupt.' It is at home, by the fireside, in the library that the members of this sisterhood are to work—books and pictures, ornaments and papers—fast passing into decay with the dissolution of households. They will preserve family traditions and save from oblivion deeds of heroism and acts of sacrifice as worthy immortality as those which chance has brought to the attention of the world.

"They will impress upon their daughters and their sons the great dignity of citizenship in the model Republic of the nations, and the duty devolving upon them to understand in order to maintain the institutions which have established the independence of men.

"As the society opens its doors to all eligible women of established descent, without regard to politics or religion, so it draws no social lines, excepting those requiring personal eligibility and worth. It recognizes the fact that the soldiers and sailors and workers in that immortal struggle where 'groom fought like noble, squire like knight, were not necessarily of aristocratic pretensions or social prominence. Personal distinction is dear to the heart, and that is an honorable pride which seeks to establish its right of descent from those noble officers who led their troops into danger, were foremost in the attack, and last in the retreat.

"But all the world does these men honor. We take the higher ground that of that immortal band the name of the sharpshooter at Lexington; the Quaker scout at Brandywine; the shoeless private, who left his bleeding footprints upon the snow at Valley Forge, is as honorable a legacy as that of the most brilliant aid of Washington or Lafayette. We honor all who in her darkest hour despaired not of the Republic, and upon this ground we honor them alike.

"The founders of the society find their anticipations more than realized. Gentle and honorable women, with historic names and earnest aspirations, are enrolling themselves in every state, glad to find adequate expression for the love of family and tradition enshrined in every womanly heart, and eager to join a communion in which women can form a sisterhood productive only of good. Applications pour in from every quarter. The great cities and small country communities are forming into chapters and planning their work. The chapter feature is a peculiarly happy one. Composed of accepted members the society, drawn together because of mutual congeniality, supplementing the great common interests of the society, these local associations develop a social feature of great worth and dignity.

"It is these smaller organizations that the work of research and verification of relics and documents, and the literary labor essential to the development of the plan, will be most efficiently performed. The chapters are all under the general supervision of an officer in each state who, after the first year, will be by virtue of office a member of the national board of management. Each chapter is represented in the general congress to be held each year, by its regent and by elected delegates, in proportion to its membership.

"Nothing could be more simple or more in accord with the institutions of the country than this system. Every office is elective. Each chapter has control over its own membership. The affairs of the society are governed under the constitution by the national congress, composed of delegates from every chapter in the Union, and during the interval between meetings of the congress, by the national board of management, consisting of officers elected by the congress and of state regents elected by chapters.

"That this system the little seed modestly planted by a few ladies October 11, 1890, has already grown into a spreading tree, of which the roots penetrate into every corner of the Union; and the branches are laden with the blossoms of patriotic sentiment fast ripening into a fruitage worthy to represent the descendants of the heroes of the American revolution."

Died at 90.

Lima, O., Aug. 12.—Mrs. Catherine Bashore has died aged 90 years. She, with her husband, located here in 1829. The town site at that time was a dense forest, and the Shawnee Indians owned most of the land where the city stands. They built a log cabin and kept the first tavern in Lima. Her husband died 42 years ago. One daughter, Mrs. John P. Adams, wife of the well known grocer, was the first white child born in this place. She has great grandchildren living here. She remembered old Quilns, one of the famous chiefs of the Shawnees, and had a wonderful memory of pioneer events.

Rich But Starved to Death.

Pleasantville, N. J., Aug. 12—Mrs. Mary Durand, 75 years old, a sister of the French General Durand, and reputed to own an estate in France worth $5,000,000, died Monday from starvation at her home in Egg Harbor City. She was buried yesterday.

Have we any truly great men at the present day? Some doubt it, and ask to be shown the modern Washington, Franklin, or Webster. However this may be, of one thing we are sure, there never was a greater blood purifier than Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

ANOTHER MISSING MISS.

A Southern Girl Disappears Mysteriously at Mansfield.

Mansfield, O., Aug. 12.—One week ago to-day, San Francisco Craig, a young lady of Mobile, Ala., aged seventeen years, arrived in this city to visit her uncle, James Craig. She remained at his home until last Friday, when she left, ostensibly to visit other relatives at Lucas, this county. She was supposed to be there, but her relatives came here to-day and gave the information that she had not been there. No trace of her has been discovered, and foul play is feared.

Can Come In Under Bond.

Washington, Aug. 12.—Supt. Owen has instructed the commissioner of immigration at Boston to accept bond in the sum of $2,500 each for the release and landing of 16 Hebrew families, detained as likely to become public charges. The 16 families were part of 127 Russian Hebrews who arrived at Boston on July 23, and 16 families were detained as they were found to be without means. They were driven from home and "their present condition," says Supt. Owen, "seems to be the result of an incident, and not of inability to provide the ordinary necessities of life."

MARRIED FOR HER MONEY.

A Strange Case in the London Courts.

A Man's Villainy Exposed by a Suit for Divorce Filed in London To-Day.

London, Aug. 12.—Miss Alice Cooper, formerly of New York, but recently of Paris, has sued to annul her marriage with her cousin, Mr. Walter Beverly Crane. She declares in her application for a divorce that Crane drove her to the church of St. Brides, Fleet street, on the pretext of visiting St. Paul's cathedral, and when there he swore he would shoot her unless she consented to marry him.

The plaintiff further alleges that she became dazed at his threat and went through the ceremony. The marriage has never been consummated. The respondent, it is asserted, told a New York lawyer that he only wanted the girl's money. He afterwards found she was not rich and he therefore did not want her. Judgment will be rendered to-morrow.

THREE PRECIOUS LIVES

Lost in the Maumee Bay Yesterday Afternoon,

By the Capsizing of the Yacht Nellie C.

Graphic Description of Scenes in and Around Presque Isle—The Coroner's Verdict—The Victims.

"The Nellie has gone down and those on board are drowning."

The alarm coming from the lips of a man who had witnessed the terrible disaster aroused as with an electric shock the dozen of men who had gathered on the veranda of the restaurant at Presque Isle yesterday afternoon.

A terrific wind and rain storm was sweeping the island, and anxious eyes peered through the density and darkness of the storm to catch a glimpse of the two yachts that had been seen but a few minutes before just off the shore.

Out into the blinding storm ran a score of men rushing to the rescue. Every one raced toward the boat house only to find it locked.

Smash! Smash! In went the door and a minute later half a dozen row boats had put off for the scene of the accident.

And such a scene.

The dozen people who stood in the downpour on the shore, helpless and hopeless, will never forget it.

The two yachts lay not over 150 yards apart, the Daisy, on the edge of the channel and the other, the Nellie, right in the center of it.

Through the storm came cries for help, and help was speedily rendered.

Capt. Joe Hepburn, of the Daisy, and his companion, Henry Lowater, swam to the dinkey when the yacht went over, but the other had no dinkey.

Half a dozen people could be seen standing on the bow of the Nellie wildly waving their hands and crying for assistance. A moment before they were seen struggling in the water.

"There are only six on the yacht and nine went out," shouted Capt. Pat Mitchell as he bent to the oars.

"By heaven, three must be yet under water."

Upon the Scene.

When Hepburn and Lowater reached the Ella the young women saved were placed in the rowboats and taken ashore, while the two rescuers sought for the missing girls. In vain an attempt was made to stave in the cabin with an oar, and it was not until a tug came along and gave Hepburn an axe that an entrance could be made.

The door of the cabin in all those yachts leads directly from the immediate stern, and as the yacht had gone down stern first and lay at an angle of 45 degrees, with bow uppermost, the girls in the cabin were as securely imprisoned as if chained therein.

From the shore Hepburn could be seen plying the ax, and five minutes later the bodies of the three dead girls lay on the deck of the tug Runnels.

The tugmen and Messrs. Hepburn and Lowater used every means possible to restore life, but the light had gone out and could not be relit.

Two bodies were easily rescued, but for the third Mr. Hepburn was obliged to go twice. He managed to raise her with his foot until he secured a hold on her clothing. The dead girls were:

CLARA BURDO, aged 17, 324 Michigan avenue.

ELLA FEELEY, aged 20, 393 Lafayette street.

LENA SANBERG, 506 West Lafayette street.

The latter was forewoman at the awning establishment of Breyman Bros., Summit street. Miss Feeley was a dressmaker, well-known in Father Hannin's parish, and Miss Burdo, the daughter of Sidewalk Inspector Burdo, of Manhattan.

The Start from the Island.

Quite a number of people watched the Ella C. leave the boat house. There were on her Fred Essing, Fred Kasdorf, Fred Prichard, Lena Sanberg, Mary Sanberg, Nonie Sullivan, Ella Feeley, Clara Burdo and Kate Rice.

"I wouldn't go out far if I were you," said a gentleman in the pavilion as the girls prepared to go on board.

One of the girls objected strenuously to going but was finally, amid much laughter and coaxing, persuaded upon to go. She was one of those drowned.

"Those fellows can't handle that boat," said Pat Mitchell, when he saw the bungling way in which the canvas was raised.

George Tucker, captain of the Nellie, remained on shore, and was one of the first to go to the rescue.

"They asked me to go along," he said to a BEE, who was standing near, "but I refused on the ground that I had an engagement on the island."

"Did you know any of the girls?"

"Well, I met Ella Feeley once before, but all the others were strangers to me. We had just returned from a cruise and had put into Presque Isle out of the approaching storm. When the weather cleared away the girls proposed a sail and the boys agreed to it. I said I would go along later."

A Terrific Squall.

The squall in which the yachts capsized was of cyclonic intensity. The boats were struck with two squalls. Both crafts had prepared for the first by lowering canvas and casting anchor. They rode the blow-out bravely, and when the rain ceased and the fog lifted it was intensely dark. The anchor were weighed and canvas hoisted again. It was not over two minutes from the time the canvas went up until what is known as a white squall—a treacherous gale—was seen sweeping out of the woods across the bay.

It was seen in a moment that the yachts had decided to breast it with full canvas up. It did not look nearly so bad or fierce as the first, as it was unaccompanied by any darkness, but it struck the island with a force that shook every building upon it. The shutters on the stands and restaurant were closed with a crash, and the trees bent as if about to break. A dredge was at work a short distance from the shore, and its attendant tug with two mud scows were passing up light from the dumping grounds when the yachts capsized. The tug at once cut loose and hastened to the rescue.

The Rescued on the Island.

As may be imagined the people of the island, and particularly the women, were in the state of the greatest excitement when the rescued girls landed at Presque Isle. Women screamed and went into hysterics, although a few of them proved regular heroines. The attendants on the island deserve the greatest credit, not only for the services rendered, but for the hearty way in which they tried to render assistance to the shipwrecked unfortunates. Mr. Cook, at the restaurant, jumped from the pavilion when he found the boathouse locked, and was the first to secure a row boat. In fact the attendants behaved admirably. The men dropped everything and risked at least a wetting if not their lives in the storm which lashed the bay into a white foam.

The girls who were taken from the yachts were kindly cared for at the electric station and the good lady who presides over the household proved herself a friend in need to the poor, hysterical, heart-broken girls.

The lamentations of Miss Sanberg was piteous, and to make the situation even more unbearable, several other women went off on a tangent and were hysterical to a degree not even equalled by the sufferers themselves.

Captain Hepburn's Story.

Capt. Joe Hepburn, when he reached the shore after his exertions, looked and felt completely played out, as indeed was also his friend and companion, Mr. Lowater.

"It was terrible, horrible," he said to a BEE. "Lowater and I came down in search of a dinkey we had lost, and when passing the Ella C we were hailed and told they had found our boat."

"How did the accident happen?"

"I can hardly tell you. We weathered the first squall all right, but thought we could run through the second. It was one of those fierce white ones that scarcely gives any warning. It was upon us before we were aware, and struck us like a solid substance, and over we went. Upon regaining our small boats, Lowater shouted that the people of the Ella C were drowning, and we put off at once to the rescue.

"Five or six of the boys and girls were standing or clinging to the bow of the upturned yacht. The cabin was under water with the door downwards. They kept crying to us that there were three or four girls drowning in the cabin. Both Lowater and I dove but could not reach the cabin door. When the tug came along I got an ax and stove in a hole large enough to allow the bodies through.

"We had not much difficulty in getting them out. They lay together near the door, and were limp and lifeless. The third lay so that I could not reach her except with my foot. I hooked my foot in the bend of her knee, and in that way raised her until I could get a hold. No, I don't think there was any one to blame. No yacht could have stood up in that squall. It struck like a board, and there was no resisting it."

Brought to the City.

The bodies of the three drowned girls were brought up to the city by the tug Runnells, Fred Essing also coming up to the city on the tug. In the meantime Park's ambulance had been telephoned for and when the tug arrived at the city the ambulance was there to meet them. The bodies lay on the after part of the tug covered with a blanket.

There was great excitement about the dock when the tug arrived, as rumors of the accident had reached the city, but nothing definite was known. The Runnells made a landing near the Jefferson street wharf, and it was with difficulty that the excited crowd could be kept off of the tug. Coroner Roulet had been telephoned for, and was at once on the spot, where he viewed the remains. The bodies were placed in the ambulance and taken to Park's undertaking rooms, East Toledo. Later in the evening the bodies were claimed by relatives and were taken to their respective homes.

As Told to the Coroner.

Last evening Coroner Routlet took the testimony of Capt. Ben. Wilkinson of the tug Runnells and his engineer, Levi Sheldon. Their story of the rescue and attempt to resuscitate the drowned girls was the same as given above. Captain Wilkinson stated that the squall came without any warning whatever. It was raining at the time, when suddenly the blow came on and for a few minutes he had all he could do to look out for his tug and the scow he had in tow. He then saw the capsized yacht and immediately steamed alongside. The cabin was chopped open with an ax from the tug and the three bodies taken out.

Coroner Roulet finished the inquest this morning by taking the testimony of Fred Essing, Fred Kasdorf and Fred Pritchard, the three young men who were on the yacht, and also of Capt. Joseph W. Hepburn and Henry Lowater, who were on the Daisy.

After taking the testimony of all the witnesses in the drowning case Coroner Roulet rendered a verdict of death from accidental drowning.

Fred Essing's Statement.

Fred Essing lives at 617 Magnolia street and is 23 years of age. He is a young man of good habits and has spent most of his life about boats of all kinds. He is considered a good sailor, and he was acting as skipper of the Nellie C when the accident happened. His story is as follows:

"George Tucker, Fred Kasdorf, Fred Pritchard and myself had been on a week's cruise with the Nellie C., a 32-foot, schooner-rigged yacht, and returned from Detroit Monday night, landing at Point Place, where we spent the night. Yesterday morning we ran over to Presque Isle, arriving there about 9 o'clock. There we met the girls. Fred Kasdorf knew Ellen Feeley and Fred Pritchard knew Clara Burdo, and we were all made acquainted, but I forget the names, as I had never met any of the girls before.

"The girls invited us to dinner and we accepted. After dinner the girls wanted us to take them sailing, but I objected, as it was blowing too hard. Then the girls wanted to go out and sit on the yacht. We took them out and were aboard about an hour when the wind died down. The girls again wanted to go sailing, but I still objected, as there was an ugly black cloud in the west. They all insisted on going, however, and we finally started and I sailed the boat.

"We picked up a boat belonging to Hepburn and afterwards took it out to the Daisy and turned it over to Mr. Hepburn who was looking for it. We then started back and when about a quarter of a mile from Presque Isle the first squall struck us. We dropped all our forward canvas and waited until it passed. It was raining and the girls went in the cabin.

"When it passed the sun shone again and the girls came out of the cabin. They were only about five minutes when it again commenced to rain and they returned to the cabin. The wind died out completely and there was not enough to give us headway, and consequently we could not steer.

"Suddenly another squall from the west struck us broadside. It did not give the least sign of warning and caught us with all canvas up. I yelled to the boys to let go the jib and foresail, which they did, but by this time the boat had commenced to keel over. I called to the girls to come out of the cabin, and two of them got out, while Fred Kasdorf pulled another of the girls out of the skylight. He then dove down and attempted to get another one, but she was fast and we could not release her.

"The three girls who were rescued were terribly frantic, and we could hardly keep them from jumping into the water again. They struggled and cried, and we were obliged to hold them on the yacht by main force. We were all standing on the side of the yacht when Joseph Hepburn and Henry Lowater came over to us in two small boats from the Daisy. We tried to break into the sides of the cabin with oars but could not produce the least effect. Then the tug Runnels came up and getting an axe from her I chopped open the side of the cabin.

"Hepburn, Kasdorf, Lowater and myself reached in and pulled the bodies of the girls out, for they were drowned by that time. It was from twenty minutes to half an hour after we had capsized before we broke into the cabin. As soon as the bodies were pulled out we put them on the scow, rolled them on a barrel and tried every possible means to bring them to life for about half an hour.

"In the meantime the other girls had been taken ashore in the small boats. When we found we couldn't bring the girls to life we put them on the tug and brought them up to the city. I came up with them."

In answer to questions Essing stated that they had no beer or liquors on the boat and had not drank any since starting on the cruise.

Others Tell the Same Story.

Kasdorf and Pritchard told exactly the same story in substance, and all of the young men were much affected by the terrible event. When the yacht capsized Kasdorf became foundered in the fore halyards and had a narrow escape before he could extricate himself.

The squall came so suddenly that it did not raise much of a sea and only lasted a few minutes. The Daisy was to the windward of the Nellie C and went over first. Hepburn and Lowater immediately jumped into their two boats and started for the Nellie, as they knew there were ladies on board and the intended to take them off, but they little thought of the awful work before them. The Nellie C did not sink, as she is fitted with air tight compartments, and these kept her partly above water. The cabin, however, was submerged.

The testimony all goes to show that the accident was unavoidable and not the result of any carelessness. When the yacht capsized everything possible was done to save the imprisoned ladies.

The Yachts.

The Nellie C. is owned by Edson and Gates, and the men who were cruising in her were given the use of the yacht for having fitted her out this spring. She is an old boat, but staunch and seaworthy and considered one of the stiffest yachts in the harbor. She was towed up to Hepburn's boathouse last evening by the tug Uncle Sam.

The Daisy sunk after capsizing, but last evening she was towed alongside a dredge and the water syphoned out. She is now at her anchorage with a broken topmast as the only damage.

Miss Clara Burdo

Was 17 years old and has always resided at home with her parents at 324 Michigan avenue. She was the oldest child of Sidewalk Inspector Burdo and was the pride of her father and mother. She was a member of the high school and would have graduated with the class of '92. For 18 months she received her religious education at the St. Mary's convent at Monroe, Mich., and was a member of St. Joseph's church.

Mr. Burdo was informed of the sad accident late in the afternoon, and could not believe that it was his daughter until he went and saw her lifeless body at Undertaker Parks', who prepared the body for burial, and at a late hour last night conveyed it home to the bereaved parents.

Miss Burdo left home yesterday morning with an aunt and the rest of her girl friends to enjoy the day at Presque Isle.

Miss Lena Sanberg

was 22 years and 11 months old and resided with her parents at the corner of Collingwood avenue and Lafayette street. She was employed as forelady in the Breyman Bros. tent and awning factory on Summit street. She was the oldest daughter of Charles Sanberg, the draryman.

The first news the family had of the awful accident was when the dead body was brought home in a hack.

Arrangements for the funeral have been made for to-morrow afternoon at 1:30 at the house. Miss Sanberg was a member of St. Paul's Lutheran church.

Miss Ellen Feeley

was 20 years old last March and the daughter of Thomas Feeley of 325 West Lafayette street. She was also employed at Breyman Bros. and was a member of Father Hannin's church, where the funeral will be held to-morrow morning at 8 o'clock. The entire family and hosts of her friends are heart broken over the sad affair.

A TIME AT THE ASYLUM.

Dr. and Mrs. Eyman Pleasantly Remembered

By the Employes of All Grades—Silver Tea Service and Other Souvenirs Presented—A Hop Enjoyed.

Last evening a very pleasant affair occurred at the Toledo insane asylum. As is now well known, Dr. H. C. Eyman has been elected as superintendent of the Cleveland asylum, and to-morrow morning leaves to assume his duties.

Having been connected with the Toledo institution since it was started, the doctor has, by his genial manner and accommodating ways, won many warm friends, as has also Mrs. Eyman. To show their appreciation, the employes of the asylum gathered up a goodly sum of money, and with it, Dr. Pugh and Mrs. Kelly, the committee chosen, purchased the gift which was presented to Dr. and Mrs. Eyman last night.

The occasion was in the nature of a farewell reception, and included a hop which was participated in by the officers, together with a few invited friends. At 8:30, when the labors of the day had been closed, all who possibly could wended their way to the amusement hall, where dancing was indulged in until nearly 10 o'clock.

An intermission then took place, during which time the articles to be presented were placed on the stage, and Dr. and Mrs. Eyman and Miss Ethel escorted thither. All gathered in front of the platform, when Superintendent Tupper addressed the family as follows:

Doctor and Mrs. Eyman: I am delegated by the personnel of this asylum, with which you have been associated almost from its opening, to tell you how glad we all are that you are going, because it will give your patients one more chance to get well; glad because you are called up higher in labors of usefulness and love, into broader fields, where your abilities can and will respond to more and greater calls for assistance. But our gladness is not an unmixed joy by any means; would it were, then we might, perhaps, feel as we hope and trust you will feel when you have put off the old and put on the new clothes of responsibility, but because we have known you so well, known you to be good, and true, patient and kind, and reliable, we are sorry to lose you from among us. However, our loss will be others' gain. From your limited acquaintance with you, Dr. Eyman, I have learned to love and esteem you, and bid you God-speed on your upward grade. It is none too good for you and yours, notwithstanding its many beauties and conveniences. As a slight token of the general esteem in which you and Mrs. Eyman are held by those who know you best, I have been given the honor to present you with this remembrance memento, whose color is a fit emblem of the lives it is destined to serve, and which appropriately holds the kindly wishes and feelings of all for your future welfare and prosperity.

But the jewel of the family, Miss Ethel, has not been unremembered nor overlooked. The best things are always done up in small bunches and frequently have reddish hair! This case is for such a bundle, Ethel.

During Dr. Tupper's remarks, it was plain to be seen that Dr. Eyman was much affected, and it was with great difficulty that he was able to respond. He made a feeling talk, however. In a sense he regretted that he was to leave the place where he had received so much kindness at the hands of the officials. He returned his heartfelt thanks, and stated that he could never forget his pleasant dealings with all. The doctor paid a tribute to the faithfulness of all the employes, their labor being of a character which called for much patience and intelligent action. He voiced his own sentiments as well as his associates on the staff when he said that it would be difficult to gather together a more zealous corps of workers. In behalf of himself and family, he again returned thanks for the generous gift.

An inspection of the table was then made. The presents consisted of a silver tea set of seven pieces, a tray, berry dish, and a pair of silver sugar tongs, together with a jewel box for Miss Ethel. The goods are elegant and costly.

An incident worthy of mention occurred yesterday. Mr. McElroy, one of the patients, contributed a dollar bill for little Ethel, who was his favorite, and the same was presented last night with dignity. Mr. McElroy was much grieved when he learned of the contemplated departure.

On the whole, the evening, though tinged with much regret, was passed in a happy manner.

Boy Missing.

William Gampher, a 15-year-old lad, living with his parents near the Maumee boiler works, is mysteriously missing, and his absence has caused his parents much anxiety. The boy left home Monday noon and has not since been heard of. He said that he was going to the Burnett house to ask for employment, but inquiry reveals the fact that he never went there. His distracted parents have not the least idea as to what has become of him and to-day reported the matter to the police, who are now looking for him. The boy is described as being large for his age and wearing light coat, dark pants and dark stiff hat.

The Foresters returned from Maumee this morning and reported a most enjoyable time and a splendid reception by the hospitable citizens of the hustling little burg on the river.

RAILROADS HEREABOUTS.

The Weighing of Lumber Locally.

The Fool Killer Can Get a Job.

Local Roads and Limited Tickets—The C., H. V. & T. Want to Enter Findlay—Sparks.

A circular has been issued announcing that C. T. Wight of Toledo, commercial agent of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, will have charge hereafter of the pine lumber traffic originating west of the Ohio river, also merchandise and other traffic originating at Toledo and in the state of Michigan. Mr. Wight has done much to increase the business of the B. & O. at this point and his efforts are appreciated by the company and the shippers.

A Branch of the C., H. V. & T.

The Columbus, Hocking Valley & Toledo railroad has an eye on Findlay. It is desired that the route shall be from Alvada, passing through the best part of Hancock county, striking Findlay on the northeast. The entrance of this road into Findlay would greatly benefit the shippers of that place, giving them additional connections to Toledo, Columbus and other points of importance.

Lumber Weighing at Toledo.

The matter of taking the weighing of lumber at this port from the hands of the Middle States Lumber association and placing it under the supervision of the Toledo Car Service association is being considered by a committee appointed for that purpose and some arrangement will be decided upon in a week or so. It is desired to put into effect some plan that will at once prove less expensive and more efficient than has been the case heretofore.

The Fool Killer in Demand.

"It is surprising," said one of the gentlemen in Gates' ticket office, this morning, "how superstitious some, in fact most people, are. So great are the numbers who will not start on a trip Friday for fear of attending bad luck, that a general dullness is felt in local business on that day. Sensible people can profit by this, for by traveling Friday they will find plenty of empty seats in the coaches and lots of room for the baggage and feet. The fool killer will have his hands full when he reaches this territory."

On Local Lines.

Some few months ago, when limited tickets were generally adopted on through business, it was thought that the lines entering Toledo would use them locally as soon as their stock of unlimited tickets had been disposed of. At present, however, it looks as if the unlimited ticket will continue to exist on local lines. The limited ticket has not proven popular with the traveling public and some of the lines that adopted them on through business are backing out of the arrangement. A prominent general passenger agent when asked about the matter said yesterday: "The limited ticket movement is not dead, but it is rapidly dying and will probably never be applied on the local lines."

Stepped in Front of a Train.

George Copeland, an aged watchman in Howell's brick yard, was killed about 4:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon by a passenger train on the D. & M. He was walking along the track going to his work and was struck when near the Smith bridge works. He stepped right in front of the approaching train thinking perhaps that it was on another track.

Clover Leaf Cars in the Creek.

Last evening at 7 o'clock four cars on the Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City railroad were dumped into Swan creek—two box and two coal cars. The bridge had been turned to allow a boat to pass and was just swinging back when the engineer on switch engine No. 10 backed his train off into the water. Two switchmen on the rear of the train had a narrow escape.

OFFICE OF THE TOLEDO BEE, TOLEDO, O., Aug. 12

London wheat market strong, turned arer. Liverpool wheat firm and ½ pence higher. Corn firm and dearer.

The receipts of wheat at seven principal western points to-day are 1,010,202 bu, compared with 390,625 bu on the same day last year.

Charters—Mr. T. J. Southard reports the following: Schrs. Rounds, Hallaran, wheat to Erie on through rate. Propellers Tampar, Shelton, large Eley, wheat to Buffalo 2c, Propeller Niagara, wheat to Kingston 3c.

Toledo Elevator Weights.—Toledo has now an inspector of weights at the principal elevators, and the secretary would like to hear of any complaints of shortage.

Liverpool, Aug. 12.—The export of Russian rye is prohibited after the 15th inst.—Special Cable to Daily Trade Bulletin.

Bradstreets reports the visible supply of wheat increased last week, 662,000 bu; corn decreased 112,000 bu, oats increased 230,000 bu, Pacific coast wheat increased 230,000 bu.

The cable dispatch to the Chicago "Bulletin," printed herein, and stating that Russia has prohibited the exportation of rye, is no doubt authentic and reliable, and is a magnificent corroboration of the statement of deficiency and of the distress.

The receipts of wheat to-day at seven principal western points are 619,677 bus in excess of the corresponding Monday in 1890.

The export clearances yesterday from four Atlantic ports were 672,290 bus of wheat. The export of flour was moderate and corn light.

English markets as reported herein are strong and high for wheat and corn in that country.

In our extracts from London and Liverpool papers will be found points of interest. Liverpool proposes to inaugurate a system of trading in American winter wheat for future delivery, as they do now in California.

The reports from French wheat threshing, as reported at Bordeaux, are disappointing in both yield and quality.

Antwerp millers are offering more for wheat delivered next year than for spot.

It has been a marked day in American grain markets. The excitement at times, has, perhaps, exceeded any other day in the trade during this crop and the trading very large. English advices are said to have closed one shilling higher for wheat on the spot and a larger advance on futures. Three weeks ago we commenced stating to our readers that America would be the great arbiter of prices this year—that advanced prices on this side would be reflected abroad, and so it has proved. We can overdo this kind of business as well as in the active departments of life, but on a reasonable basis of about $1 per bu we should not be surprised to see the markets maintained for the present.

The markets for wheat east and west advanced largely to-day, with great competition in the buying. The outside prices were not maintained, but the close shows a substantial advance.

Corn has been more quiet and closes about where it did yesterday, with the difference in buyers' favor.

In New York August wheat closed at $1 05, a gain of 2c; September at $1 04⅝c, a gain of 2¼c. August corn at 72c, a loss of ½c; September at 68¼c, a loss of ¾c.

In Chicago August wheat closed at 96½c, a gain of 1¾c; September at 94c, a gain of 1⅜c. August corn at 62c, a loss of ½c; September 59c, a loss of ¼c.

In Toledo.

The trading in wheat futures has been very large aggregating 1,750,000 bu. Mill prices close higher, the cash break of 1c to 2c from the highest point, and it has been a day of fluctuations. On the call August wheat sold at 96¼ to 96½c. September at 95¾c. December at 98¾@98¼c.

After the call August sold at 96¼c to 99¼c, and closed at 97¼c; September at 96c to 98⅝c, and closed at 97c; December at 98c to $1 01½, and closed at 99c.

Cash wheat was in large demand, and all the offerings were absorbed. No. 2 soft opened at 96½c and sold up to 97c. At the close 98c was bid. After change 100,000 bushels were sold in exchange for August at a premium of 1c a bushel. No. 3 soft at 95½@96c and higher at close.

No. 4 soft at 92c; rejected No. 1 at 90c; No. 2 white at 96c. Wheat and rye at 92c.

Corn—Nothing doing. No. 3 yellow at 65c. Oats—No 2 about 30½c; No 3 white at 35½c.

Rye active at large advance. No 2, 85 to 86½; Aug at 83 to 85½; No 8 at 84.

Clover seed on the call, 350 bags for Oct sold at $4 60; after the call, Dec at $4 70.

"The state board of (un) equalization commences sessions in Springfield today," is a head-line of the Chicago Times. Illinois appears to have given itself the same kind of a board that a republican steal foisted on Ohio.

Senator Carlisle is a vigorous and clear-headed thinker, and with the courage of his convictions is blessed with the faculty of coming to right conclusions. He sizes up the man from Maine about right when he says:

"Mr. Blaine is really as high a protectionist as the worst of them all. He struck a popular chord when he sang out for reciprocity, and he is now reaping the benefits of his popularity. I think Mr. Blaine could be beaten by a united and vigilant democracy. If President Harrison is renominated he will be defeated overwhelmingly."

Advices from China indicate that they "make the punishment fit the crime" over there in some instances. The reports of the riotings, pillages, and massacres in connection with the various Christian missions are of a kind to awaken the most serious apprehensions. The promptness with which the French and British ministers resident in China are demanding indemnity on account of recent riots suggests that the United States government should be looking after the interests of its citizens now in that much embroiled country. A minister to China from this country might with propriety be on the grounds, and be very useful there, too.

Sir Hector Langevin, who resigned from the Dominion ministry yesterday, greatly to the astonishment and confusion of his colleagues, has a memory that will challenge the admiration of John Wanamaker. Mr. Pitus having testified under oath that he gave Sir Hector $10,000 for election purposes in 1887, the minister in his statement says he has "no recollection of the alleged transaction." So far the course of the Ottawa investigation has stirred up a number of unexpected scandals in administration affairs, and the end is not in sight. The Pennsylvania brethren may yet get some pointers on political corruption from our neighbors on the north.

The deaths from drowning at Presque Isle yesterday place Toledo in the list of cities in which such disasters are chronicled for 1891, a list unusually large. There have been an unprecedented number of these fatalities recorded this season. This may be because boating and other amusements on and in the water are growing in favor. Such innocent and healthful recreations are not to be foregone. They should be encouraged; but the attendant dangers should never be minimized or made light of. Experience, caution and good sense in management of a boat are necessary antecedents to the safety of its passengers. Foolhardiness is a sound and significant word, and its exhibition too often makes boating a dangerous pastime. In the sad event of yesterday it may be no blame attaches to any one, but the event emphasizes the moral of this little sermon.

James Russell Lowell is dead, and America has lost a citizen whom the civilized world delighted to honor. Fifty years ago he wrote his first book, a volume of poetry entitled "A Year's Life," and since then his pen has seldom been idle while its every contribution has been a valuable addition to English literature. It is to such men as Lowell and Longfellow, Holmes and Whittier, Hawthorne and Irving, we owe it that America achieved a recognized and honorable position in the world of letters, which it rests upon their successors to worthily maintain. "The Biglow Papers" of Mr. Lowell were distinctively American, and though written forty-five years ago they have never lost their charm for American readers. Editor, essayist, poet, Harvard professor, diplomat, Mr. Lowell has been in the highest sense successful in everything he has undertaken. A nation, richer for his life and labors, unites in mourning the universal loss in his death. His works will long survive him, to delight and instruct succeeding generations.

Toledo people are to-day welcoming a delightful change in the weather, after a week of very warm days. What has been considered uncomfortable heat here has been, by comparison with other cities, comfortable weather. In Chicago there have a great number of deaths, the direct result of heat. In New York city yesterday at 1 o'clock the thermometer registered 92 degrees, and the day before reached 97 1-2 degrees. There were forty cases of heat prostration reported yesterday, eleven of which proved fatal. The suffering reported from the crowded tenement house districts in all the large cities was very great, and as usual in such cases probably the half is not known and will never be told. Sickness in many forms less sudden than sunstroke will fasten upon the victims heat and unhealthy surroundings prepare, and the resultant mortality can never be accurately computed. Our city is open and healthy in all directions. Its growth has never been in such fashion as to shut in sections from impure air. May the day never come when a different story will be told.

The Home-Rule union of London has drafted a bill on Irish affairs which it is claimed the liberal party will make its policy when parliament meets again. It goes farther than Mr. Gladstone's bill of 1886, substituting the words "Irish parliament" where Mr. Gladstone used "legislative body;" includes provisions for international trade which Mr. Gladstone's bill excluded, and by which the Irish parliament, if established, would levy and collect home duties; invests in the parliament power to deal with land held by corporations and to endow secular education. No such radical measure has ever before been proposed for home-rule in Ireland, and should the bill be advocated by the liberal party, as is now assumed in political circles in England, that course would be a guarantee that the liberals were sincere in their support of home-rule, notwithstanding the Parnell catastrophe, and at a same time a challenge to the conservatives which could not be evaded. The next session of parliament promises to be interesting and brief. If the liberals, unionists and Irish members are united the government party can be quickly placed in the minority, a dissolution would be necessary, and a general election would follow, which might return the liberals to power. Only a few months is necessary to carry out this entire program. Will Gladstone be able again to marshal the hosts he has so long and ably led? His age and condition of health considered, this is certainly doubtful.

MISSIONARIES.

It will have been noticed that there has been this summer an increasing number of reports of "missing girls." In some instances the report of such a case has been followed by the record of a murder committed with more or less atrocious accessories. In others the missing girls have been found under circumstances more or less disastrous to their present reputation and future happiness. Occasionally a mysterious disappearance is reported which remains a mystery, and the unhappy relatives of the unfortunate victim never learn her fate.

With all desire to be just and charitable it must be acknowledged that these missing girls are, as a rule, in some degree responsible for their own undoing. They have made undesirable acquaintances, and kept the fact secret from those who are entitled to be made acquainted with those whom they know. They meet away from home those whom they know they could not meet in the presence of their friends. They are not bad, these girls, but they are very, very foolish. They play with edged tools, and think it is romantic fun, until they pay for their folly with life or reputation.

So great is the increase in this unfortunate record of folly and crime that it should be dealt with openly. Press and pulpit should sound a note of warning, and in the best guarded homes these things should be discussed with those most concerned and in the most danger. For those who play the criminal part in these disappearances, whether men or women, no punishment would be too great. Usually, unless murder is committed and the murderer captured, these criminals escape detection. The punishment falls upon the victims. But the victims are in the first place themselves to blame for having been guilty of the folly of making sly acquaintances. It is time the truth was told about "mysterious disappearances."

GEOGRAPHICAL CONGRESS.

Prominent Men from All Over the World.

A Universal Hour and the Spelling of Geographical Names Under Consideration

Berne, August 12.—The international geographical congress which opened here yesterday met again this morning and continued its discussion of geographical questions. Much interest is manifested in the work of the congress, and many prominent geographers and cartographers are in attendance from all the countries of the world which are interested in the science of geography.

At to-day's session a resolution was introduced providing for the preparation of a map of the earth on a scale of one one-millionth, and also for the appointment of an international committee to determine the principles upon which the preparation of the map shall proceed.

Among the questions which will be discussed by the congress are those of prime meridian, a universal hour, and the rules to be observed in the spelling of geographical names. The object of the resolution introduced to-day for the preparation of a map of the world on a one-millionth scale is to destroy the illusion that all the countries of the world are sufficiently well known and to show that there is still plenty of opportunity for explorers to open up territory that is still comparatively unknown.

In connection with the congress there is being held a geographical exhibition, at which all the nations except Great Britain and the Netherlands are represented. Much disappointment is expressed at the failure of America to send the great collection of maps that was recently on exhibition in New York which were the subject of the admiration of large numbers of geographers for the minuteness of the details of the earth's figuration which they set forth. The congress adopted a resolution to the effect that the geographical societies of the different countries represented should urge their respective governments to found chairs of geography in their universities.

REGATTA ON THE DETROIT.

An Important Event Taking Place This Morning.

Detroit, Aug. 12.—The four days' joint regatta of the Northwestern Amateur Rowing Association and the Mississippi Valley Rowing Association begins this afternoon at Ste-Clare-Sho-Sha, on the Detroit river, eight miles below the city.

Among the participants in the events are the Catlin Boat club of Chicago, 22 men of the Western club of St. Louis, 12 men of the Modoc club of same city, and the crews of the Sunnyside club, Toronto. To-day's events include the junior races, fours, pairs, singles and doubles.

Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 12.—Miss Pfaffman was arrested yesterday afternoon on suspicion of having caused the explosion at the house of R. M. Juvenal on Monday night. The evidence against her is very slight but she was held in $250 bonds on a charge of sending threatening letters through the mail.

Tiffin, O., Aug. 12.—(Special)—To-day suit was entered in the common pleas court by Leopold Mambourg, administrator of the estates of Peter Hatchet and Theophiles Malbegian, glass workers, who were killed at Fostoria a year ago, by a train on the B. & O road.

WARNING TO THE PIRATES.

More Chinese Executions are Reported.

Heads of the Criminals Hung Up in the Streets.

The Mongolian Mobs Continue Their Attacks Upon the Mission Settlements.

San Francisco, August 12.—The steamship Oceanic arrived from Hong Kong Yokohama. Advices from Hong Kong up to July 15 state that the fire of discontent is still smoldering in North China, and occasional riots are reported. The mission stations near Canton are said to have been attacked, but no particulars were received. Two of the Wusuch rioters on trial voluntarily confessed that they murdered two foreigners during the Wusuch riots. The two prisoners were accordingly sent back to the Kuayngch district and executed July 5. Their heads are hung up at Wusuch as a warning.

A correspondent at Teutsin writes under date of June 29 that all is quiet there and no trouble is anticipated.

Comparative quietness seems to have been restored in the Yangtsze Valley and several foreign gunboats have left for other stations. A correspondent at Tseing Kiang, under date of July 27, writes that the Viceroy wrote to officials here that the residences of foreigners should be searched to see if they had any babies or dead people's bones about. The Presbyterian mission was searched by an official while a crowd of excited natives waited outside. A mob broke into the Catholic mission, but were put out by the occupants, Mr. Chalfant holding the rioters at bay with his revolvers. The authorities finally sent military to the scene and soldiers guarded the place all night. On July 4 news came by telegraph from the southern part of the province of serious rioting. In this section the Catholics have large property interests, many fine churches, and a fine orphanage. Several of these have been destroyed.

At Fuchenfu, the rioters wrecked outhouses, entered the churches and priest's house and sacked everything but did not burn the building. The amount of damage done is not known, but it is learned the orphanage was not touched. Soldiers have been ordered out and patrol the streets at night, guarding Romanist property. The town is now left without a gunboat and a feeling of uneasiness prevails.

A telegram from Tienstein states that the French and British ministers in China have opened negotiations with Tsungli Yamen in regard to their claim for indemnity on account of the recent riots. The sum claimed is six million five hundred taels.

Advices from Yokohama give further particulars of the sinking of the steamer Tamaye Maru and the drowning of 200 passengers. The Tamaye Maru and another steamer, Myoshi Maru, were racing when the latter steered across the Tamaye's course and the vessels collided. The Tamaye Maru sunk immediately and only about sixty people, who were on deck, were rescued.

The increase of imports over the previous year was $309,002, and the exports showed an increase of $3,008,294, due largly to the increase in the price of coffee, the exports of that product amounting to $9,196,202. Other exports were: Bananas, $622,671; hide, $85,786; cocoa, $13,267.

The balance sheet of the republic of Paraguay recently issued shows that the public debt on September 31, 1890, was $26,405,598. The cash in the general treasury on that date was $287,236, and the cash in the treasury of public credit was $319,987. Among other assets are shares in the Paraguay Central railway, $1,050,000; shares in the Bank of Paraguay and Rio de la Plata, $2,000,000; capital of the National Bank of Paraguay, $2,101,756.

The bureau of American republics is informed that the treaty defining the boundary between Mexico and Guatemala has been extended for a term of two years by a convention just negotiated. The treaty was originally ratified in 1882 and was extended in 1885, 1886 and 1888. By the latest convention it will not expire until November 1, 1893.

The bureau of American republics is informed that the first linen mill to be established in Mexico was formally opened a few days ago near the City of Mexico. The mill, which has been built by Mr. I. Hamer, an Englishman, will cover about 42,000 feet when complete, and will produce a large range of linens and other goods.

Advices from Rio Janeiro received by the bureau of American republics state that the loan to be negotiated by Vicconde de Leopoldina is understood to be in tangible shape. The London bankers agree to advance $122,500,000 provided $12,250,000 of the loan is taken in Rio Janeiro, and it is said that the government has agreed to deposit $40,000,000 in policies with the Banco Do Brazil, which will guarantee the $12,250,000 required.

The state department has not as yet received information of the reported seizure of the Pacific mail steamship City of Panama, at La Libertad, San Salvador. It has been advised, however, of the threatened intention of the authorities of San Salvador to seize the vessel at Acajulta because she had left the port of San Salvador without properly clearing under the law. The department has telegraphed United States Minister Pacheco to examine into the facts immediately and make a report to the department of the results of his investigation.

FITZMEIER HIES AWAY,

Leaving His Accounts With Leland & Smith in Bad Shape.

The cigar and tobacco firm of Leland & Smith is looking up to the transactions of George P. Fitzmeier, one of their salesmen whose mysterious disappearance has created the suspicion that he has gone wrong.

Fitzmeier works for the firm on commission and has had charge of the city trade.

On August 1 he went to Cleveland with his wife, not telling the firm of his intentions. On August 3 he left his wife in Cleveland, telling her that he was going to return to the city to take out a trip for one of the men who was going on a vacation.

She returned home supposing that he was out on the road and was none the wiser until she received a letter from him yesterday dated in Detroit, saying that he never expected to return.

On learning of this the firm immediately instituted an investigation, as Fitzmeier had been authorized to collect his own sales. The investigation is not yet completed but so far a shortage of about $300 has been found.

Fitzmeier's friends are unable to account for his strange actions. He has always borne the reputation of being a quiet, industrious man, possessing no extravagant habits or training with that class of acquaintances. The firm have had unbounded faith in his honesty and yet believe that he will return and square himself.

LOCATED IN TOLEDO.

The Embezzling Clerk of an Omaha Bank

Visits a Relative in This City on the Sly.

Omaha Detectives Come Here But He Evades Their Clutches Very Cleverly—Tinged With Romance.

For some time past several strange-looking men have been registered at the Boody and the Jefferson house in this city, and their mysterious movements became so suspicious that they were closely watched. Investigation proves them to be Pinkerton detectives, and the following special to the Bee from Omaha tells the why and wherefore of their presence here:

A big bank robbery developed to-day in connection with the Merchants' National. It was about two weeks ago that the cashiers, in balancing and comparing their accounts at the close of a day's business, discovered a shortage of $3,000. The discovery of course created consternation and surprise. A hasty examination of the cash was made, followed by a thorough search of the bank and vaults, and a careful comparison of the books and a checking up of the day's business. Every new test and the checking process produced the same result, the cash was $3,000 short and a cloth coin bag which had contained just that amount was missing. The theft was at once reported to the officials of the bank, who were at a loss as to what action should be taken. After a careful inquiry and investigation of the case and the circumstances, suspicion fastened itself upon Paul B. Tate, a young bookkeeper who had been working for the bank for some time.

There were a number of reasons for connecting young Tate's name with the disappearance of the money, but the young man was so well connected and so well liked that the officials hesitated about charging him with the theft and allowed him to work along as usual. It was only a few days after the loss of the money that young Tate informed the bank officers that he was going to leave their employ, having secured a position in Beatrice at a better salary. His resignation was accepted and he left the city.

The detectives visited Beatrice and ascertained that Tate had in fact made arrangements for a position as bookkeeper in one of the largest institutions in that city, but had not gone there to accept it. This is now looked upon by the detective as a very clever ruse on the part of the young man. He had figured, says the detective, that when he gave notice that he was going to Beatrice the bank people would, if they suspected him of the theft of the money, immediately make inquiry as to whether he had secured a position at Beatrice or not as he had claimed. He figured that the bank officials' information from Beatrice would quiet their suspicions against him, or at least deter them from taking any immediate steps for his arrest.

When the Pinkerton man found that Tate had not been to Beatrice at all, all of the bank's suspicions of the young man's guilt were strengthened and an immediate and thorough search for him was ordered. The detective learned that a near relative of Tate was living in Toledo, Ohio, and went there to watch for him. Either luck or wit, or both, favored Tate. It has since been learned that the young man was in Toledo all the time during the detective's visit, but managed to keep out of his path.

The detective remained in the Ohio town for a week, and then got a tip that led him to think that his man was in California.

There is just a little dash of romance in the missing bank clerk's career. A year or so ago he met a young lady from San Francisco who was visiting in Omaha with the family of a prominent banker there and fell in love with her. His attentions were not distasteful at least, and he has been corresponding with the young lady since her return home. This fact came to the knowledge of the detective and he at once began to lay a trap into which the young man might be led by his affections. Decoy letters were sent inviting him to California and a nice little scheme fixed up for the young man's benefit, but it didn't work.

The detective in his search on various clews discovered an unsigned telegram warning the young man not to go to California. This telegram reached Tate at Toledo, although the detective didn't learn of it until after his return to Omaha preparatory to going to California in the futherance of his plans for Tate's capture. With this clew removed the detective was in the dark completely, and for the past ten days has been endeavoring to get some trace of Tate's whereabouts.

Young Tate is very well connected in Omaha, and his downfall is felt very keenly by his parents and relatives here. It is understood that an effort will be made by his relatives to pay the amount of his shortage if the bank will in such case drop the search for him, or the prosecution of him in case he is apprehended. The relatives have given the bank valuable assistance in the search for the young man.

WARN'S SETTLEMENT.

The Trustees Have the Matter In Charge.

The efforts of Mr. M. C. Warn to effect a settlement of his claims have so far been successful.

Mr. George Boos, one of the trustees of Lical council, National union, speaking with a BEE on the subject this morning, said:

"Mr. Warn's communication has been referred to us, and perhaps a meeting of the trustees will be held to-day to take action. No, I don't know yet just what we will do, but I expect a settlement will be effected."

"Where is Warn now?"

"Warn has a good position, and is not likely to leave it unless he could do better. He may return, but just when, I don't know."

Took 99 Ballots.

Milford, O., Aug. 12—On the ninety-ninth ballot J. J. McMackin was chosen for state senator of Butler-Brown-Clermont Warren district.

THEY LIVE ON BLACKMAIL

Jews Must Pay the Police for Protection.

A Case Where Brutal Treatment Was Noticed.

The Sultan's Handsome Daughter, Princess Zekia, at the Point of Death—Foreign Mention.

London, Aug. 12.—A dispatch from Odessa says that a sensation has been caused there by the punishment of a police agent named Kaminski for the brutal maltreatment of a Jew. It is the first time within the memory of anybody in Odessa that punishment has been inflicted on a police officer for maltreatment of a Jew, however severe.

In this case a Jew named Kaplan, a small tradesman, was walking quietly on the street. Kaminski was offended because Kaplan did not salute him, and he seized the unfortunate Hebrew and kicked and cuffed him until he was senseless.

The matter coming to the knowledge of the chief of police he prosecuted Kaminski, who has been dismissed from the service and ordered to live in the Crimea for three years.

Although orders have been repeatedly issued that Jews must be protected from personal abuse, this is the first time any important official has seen fit to carry them into effect.

The fact appears to be that Kaplan, like thousands of other Jews, was paying money to the chief for protection, and the chief wished to show that his word amounted to something.

From Constantinople comes the news that the Princess Zekia, favorite daughter of the sultan and wife of Nouredin Bey, is sick with a probably fatal disease. The sultan is inconsolable, and has news brought to him every hour of his daughter's condition. The sultan is deeply attached to Zekia. Her mother is an Anatolian and one of the most beautiful women ever brought into Constantinople.

Abul Hamed, then on the throne, bought her from a dealer in female slaves and became so attached to her that he neglected all his other wives. She died not long after the birth of Zekia and for many days after her death Abdul Hamed remained silent as a statue, barely eating enough to maintain life and indifferent to all the world.

It was thought for a time that his reason was affected. He recovered and Zekia became the apple of his eye. In order to have her near him after her marriage, he appointed Nouredin to duty at the palace. It is hoped that the young woman will recover.

Mr. Parnell is said to have spoken favorably of Mr. Dillon's speech in which he outlined the policy to be pursued by the Irish party toward the English liberals. On the other hand the liberals are angry. They claim Dillon went out of his way to cast suspicion on the motives and aims of the liberal party, and that his purpose was to induce Parnell to accept him as Irish leader.

While the sentiment of the majority of Irish members is for Dillon, there is a strong undercurrent against him, especially among the clergy, who are said to consider him too independent of the church.

The latest advices from southeastern Africa tell of appalling barbarities by the Portuguese with a view of bringing the natives to subjection.

At Mozambique it is no uncommon thing to witness natives going about with heavy yokes about their necks, under which they can scarcely move.

After enduring this torture for days, some of them were beheaded and others sent back to carry terror to their tribes.

The Portuguese have no hesitation in seizing the native women away fom their families and making domestic slaves of them, while there is no doubt of collusion between the Portuguese and Arab slave traders.

The latter, when captured by British war vessels, have confessed their relations with the Portuguese, from which it would seem the suppression of the slave trade is very doubtful while there is Portuguese territory for the dealers to plot their mischief in.

MISSIONARIES MAY LIVE.

A Decree Guarantees Protection to Them.

Capital Punishment to be Tried on the Rioters as a Warning Against Additional Offenses.

Washington, Aug. 12.—The Department of State has received a copy of the following Imperial decree of China issued June 12:

"The Tsungli Yamen (Council of Ministers) has memorialized us in regard to the missionary cases that have occurred in the various provinces, asking that we issue stringent instructions to the Governors-General and Governors to lose no time in devising means for a settlement thereof.

"It is represented by the Yamen that in the month of May the Catholic missionary premises at Wuhu, in the Province of Arhei, were fired and destroyed by a mob of outlaws. At Tan Yang Huen, in the Province of Kiang Su and at Wusuch, in the Province of Hupek, similar outrages have been committed on missionary establishments, and it is now necessary that the miscreants should be arrested and unrelenting measures taken in good time to provide against further outrages of this kind.

"The propagation of Christianity by foreigners is provided by treaty, and imperial decrees have been issued to the provincial authorities to protect the missionaries from time to time. For years peace and quiet have prevailed between Chinese and foreigners. How is it that recently there have been several missionary establishments burned out and destroyed, and all happening about the same time? This is decidedly strange and incredible.

"It is evident that among the rioters there are some powerful outlaws, whose object is to secretly contrive and plan to fan discontent among the people by circulating false rumors and causing them to become agitated and excited, and then to avail themselves of the opportunity to rob and plunder, and peaceable and law-abiding persons are enticed and led to join them, resulting in a tremendous uprising.

"If strenuous action be not taken to punish the miscreants how can the majesty and dignity of the law be maintained and peace and quiet prevail?

"Let the governor general and governors of the Hunk Kiang, Hu Kwang, Kiwang Su, Anhui and Chekiang provinces, without delay, orders to the civil and military officers under their respective jurisdictions to cause the arrest of the leaders of the riot, try them and inflict capital punishment upon them as a warning and example to others in the future.

"The doctrine of Christianity has for its purpose teaching of men to be good. Chinese converts are subjects of China and are amenable to the local authorities. Peace and quiet should reign among the Chinese and missionaries. But there are reckless fellows who fabricate stories that have no foundation in fact, for the purpose of creating trouble. Villains of this class are not few in number and are to be found everywhere.

"Let the Tartar generals, governors-general and governors issue proclamations warning the people not to listen to idle rumors or false reports, which lead to trouble. Should any person secretly post placards containing false rumors, with a view to beguile the minds of the people, strenuous efforts must be made to cause his arrest and vigorous punishment be meted out to him. The local authorities must protect the lives and property of foreign merchants and missionaries and prevent bad characters from doing them injury.

"Should it transpire that the measures taken to protect them have not been adequate, and trouble in consequence ensues, the names of those officers that have been truly neligent are to be reported to us for degradation.

"In the matter of all missionary cases still pending, let the Tartar generals, governors-general and governors cause a speedy settlement of them. They must not listen to the representations of their subordinates that the cases are difficult to settle, and thus cause delay to the end that a settlement of them may be effected.

ELOPED WITH TWO WOMEN.

Both of them Married and Mothers.

A Minneapolis Man Who Can Go on Record as Having a Great Nerve.

St. Paul, Aug. 12.—Probably the most remarkable of modern matrimonial mixtures has just occurred in Minnesota.

It requires a lot of moral obliquity and foolhardiness for a man to elope with a married woman, but what shall be said of a human being in pantaloons who has the stamina to run away with two married women, each the mother of three children?

Precisely this has taken place at Annandle, Minn. Charles W. Windus, a Minneapolis barber, is the male character in the three-cornered scandal.

The women are Mrs. Samuel Wells, the wife of a butcher of Annandale, and Mrs. Leander Watson, the wife of a well-to-do young farmer of Smith Lake, Wright county. Windus, who also appears to be known as Charles W. Edwards, formerly worked in Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Later he went to LaCrosse, and was engaged at his trade. Several months ago he located at Annandale, finding employment in the most prominent barber shop in the place. He was a good-looking young fellow who looked as if he had hardly attained his majority.

He was scrupulously stylish about his dress, and, being a man who had traveled extensively, he was an agreeable conversationalist, and took exceedingly well among the town people.

He was something of a lion among the women, but the two whose names have already been mentioned were particularly taken with the gay young fellow. Early in July Mrs. Watson was a visitor at the home of her intimate friend, Mrs. Wells, in Annandale, and the two ladies were seen with young Windus a number of times. No special attention was given this association until last week, when Windus and the two women suddenly disappeared.

The two abandoned husbands consulted the county attorney of Wright county and a warrant was issued for Windus' arrest. The village marshal of Annandale, armed with the warrant, came to Minneapolis. He was personally acquainted with Windus and was not long in locating him. But the clever young prisoner had not put up so big a job to be captured so easily. He managed to slip away from the marshal and was soon literally "out of sight." He and the two women, with whom he has been living in true Mormon style, are secreted somewhere in St. Paul. Messrs. Wells and Watson are each left with three small children. The missing women are both quite good looking and about 28 years old.

A THORN IN THEIR SIDES.

The Foreign Contract Labor Complication.

The Administration Trying to Prove that While it Was Right it Was Still Wrong.

Philadelphia, Aug. 12.—Gen. Owen, the superintendent of immigration, was in this city yesterday and was interviewed relative to the Niedringhaus decision. He said there was no friction in the department.

The assistant secretary and himself took one view, but as their position was in advance of the rules of the department, the secretary very justly took another position. The law governing the question of the importation of labor under contract permits the landing of skilled laborers, providing that it is proved that their importation here is for the purpose of establishing a new industry.

Mr. Niedringhaus made an effort to secure skilled tin-plate workers in this country, but failed. He then asked if he could import skilled workmen.

The assistant secretary and Gen. Owen took the ground that, as the skilled workmen were not to be had here, he could import them, and in this they ran counter to the rules of the department in anticipating a fact.

According to the rules, Mr. Niedringhaus will have to import the men under the clause allowing them to enter to establish a new industry. Then the question will come up as to whether they are needed for the industry and the department will render decision on the evidence adduced.

A CZAREWITZ RECEPTION.

Indian Princes Who Wore Great Strings of Diamonds and Jewels.

After being honored with a seat at the private dining table of the viceroy, writes an Indian correspondent, everything else in a social way comes to a man or woman. I have dined with the lieutenant-governor and been to various receptions and evening parties at both the beautiful Belvidere and the Government house, the last two receptions (evening parties), one each at the viceroy's and the lieutenant-governor's. Of course I went to see the future czar of all the Russians recently. He is a fairly good-looking young fellow of about 21, with a look about his eyes and jaw which suggested that he might be equal to any emergency which might arise in the future. I stood by his side for 10 minutes in a crush of 2,000 people, and so had a good look at him. I am glad that I am not czarewitz, and that he is not my imperial highness.

But what interested me more than this young imperial highness was the great assemblage of native princes, rajahs, maharjahs, etc., with their magnificent and gorgeous attire. I don't think I ever saw so many jewels in all my life. These rajahs and young princes have evidently decked themselves out for the occasion. One young maharajah had a necklace of diamonds on completely surrounding his neck, six strands deep, no one of them smaller than a large pea, and running up in size to a large hazelnut. Besides such masses of diamonds there were pearls in strings (more beautiful than diamonds), rubies, sapphires, emeralds (most beautiful), and every glorious stone the earth yields. It would pay a sent half the society women of West End, London, mad with envy just to have seen them. And to think of them being wasted on the men!

BAD ECZEMA ON BABY

Head One Solid Sore. Itching Awful. Had to Tie His Hands to Cradle. Cured by Cuticura.

Our little boy broke out on his head with a bad form of eczema when he was four months old. We tried three doctors, but they did not help him. We then used your three CUTICURA REMEDIES, and after using them eleven weeks exactly according to directions, he began to steadily improve, and after the use of them for seven months his head was entirely well. When we began using them his head was a solid sore from the crown to the eyebrows. It was also all over his ears, most of his face, and small places on different parts of his body. There were sixteen weeks that we had to keep his hands tied to the cradle and hold them when he was taken up, and had to keep mittens on his hands to keep his finger nails out of the sores, as he would scratch if he could in anyway get his hands loose. We know your CUTICURA REMEDIES cured him. We feel safe in recommending them to others.

IN THE MEADOW.

Tramping through the meadows,
In the summer day
Under the blue arch of sky,
When the clouds go sailing by,
On their windy way;

Through the bending grasses,
Tall and bushy green,
All alive with tiny things,
Stirring feet and whirring wings,
Just an instant seen:

Down each fragrant hollow,
Up each little hill,
Leaping ditches, crossing brooks,
In the heart of shady nooks,
Fresh, and cool, and still.

Past the spear-like rushes,
Swaying to and fro,
And along the river's bed,
Where grows the broad-leaved arrow head—
I wonder where the DOW?

Lost somewhere in the meadows,
Like what I meant to sing,
Who can tell what way it went,
Or lies it in my mind unbent,
A bow without a string?

There are said to be sixteen species of American trees the wood of which, when well seasoned, will sink into water. The heaviest of these is black iron wood, which is 30 per cent heavier than water. A species of oak grows in Texas and New Mexico which when green will sink almost as quickly as iron.

Gen. Mizner, who is now on the retired list, remembers Mrs. Grant when, as Miss Dent, she became engaged to the future general and president, then a young lieutenant. She was a very petite woman then, weighing about 100 pounds, while now she weighs 160. She was in great demand at charity fairs to take the part of a flower girl.

A fashionable young man has just received a sentence of 12 years and 6 months in prison from a New York judge, having six times fired his boarding house in hope of securing an insurance of $1,800 on his personal property therein. In 1841 three couples were married at the same time in a homestead near Gordon, Ga. They are all still alive and healthy, and the Macon Telegraph reports that they are arranging to celebrate their golden weddings at the homestead. All the descendants of the couples are to be present, and so are seven of the nine brothers and sisters of the contracting parties who witnessed the triple marriage.

While the crew of the steamer Laura was dragging its fish trap, near Provincetown, Mass., a huge fish broke water close alongside. One man exclaimed, "There's a finback!" The fish disappeared only to return again in a moment, when it showed almost its entire length above the water. It was then seen that it was not a finback, but an immense bone shark. The Provincetown Beacon says: "These fish are seldom seen in these waters, though several years ago one was stranded on the flats, and its liver filled three hogsheads. Old fishermen say the liver of one of these fish make oftentimes 25 to 30 barrels of oil."

A friend, who at one time enjoyed the intimate acquaintance of William Ross Wallace, the author of that very popular song, "The Sword of Bunker Hill," writes that Mr. Wallace once told him that he was paid just $10 for that piece of composition. He said, further, that Mr. Wallace encountered upon the platform of the Cooper institute, at a later day, Lowell Mason, who wrote the music for this song, and had the curiosity to ask Mr. Mason what he was paid for his share of the production. The latter answered that he received $10 also. Thus author and composer were placed on terms of strict equality. The piece netted many thousand of dollars to its publishers.

The gopher only remains a few seconds in his hole, when he feels an irresistible desire to come out again and look about him. Taking advantage of a knowledge of this habit of theirs, a little boy, 8 years old, who was lost for 10 days in the prairies of Assiniboia, 140 miles north of the Canadian Pacific railroad, in 1886, was able to save his life. The boy wore lace boots with leather laces, and used to spread a noose made with a boot-lace over a hole where he had seen a gopher go in; then he would lie down and wait for him to come out again. When the gopher, according to his wont, put his head out to the world the little boy pulled the string, caught him by the neck and ate him. As there was plenty of rain water in the holes about, the boy got along very well in this way until a search party rescued him.

Paper is fighting wood hard in the manufacture of boxes, buckets, and even packing cases, and so perfect is the manufacturing process that in many instances nothing but the wonderful difference in weight can afford a clew to the presence of paper in the manufacture. Paper packing cases are indestructible, apparently, and the saving they effect in freight is enormous. Thousands of dollars are already invested in this comparatively new industry, and a new company with $1,250,000 capital has been organized to introduce paper boards into other lines. Experiments have been made with buggy wagons and other things where lightness is needed, and paper floorings in lieu of boards will soon be heard of. It is easy to render the material fireproof in course of its construction, and this is an additional advantage that is highly appreciated.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

Another Valuable Work Concerning Russia.

Goldthwaite's and Other Magazines—Some Late New Books—Gossip About Books and Writers.

The August number of that unique publication, Current Literature, is the same success that the first number was and all subsequent ones have been. The cream of contributions in late publications is dished up for its readers, and there is not an unworthy article to waste the reader's time. Current literature aims to cover home and foreign literature, book, newspaper and periodical, and its editors do the work remarkably well. $3 a year. Send for club rates to the publishers, 30 West 23d street, New York.

The August number of Goldthwaite's Geographical Magazine has a good table of contents. Among the most interesting papers are: "The Latest Rumblings of Vesuvius," "Controlling the Mississippi," and "The Inter-Continental Railways." The "Hints to Teachers" this month is devoted to the teaching and the study of geography. "The Record of Geographical Progress" is full and valuable. This magazine, published at 130 Fulton street, New York, is $2 a year.

There is a hint of the coming autumn even in these warm August days in the New York and Paris Young Ladies' Fashion Bazar for September, and very charming some of these hints of coming fashions are. The double plate of colored costumes gives four street toilettes. The supplement has over fifty costumes, with accompanying descriptions. In the magazine proper are sixty-two articles, editorial, departmental, and contributed, stories, essays on home and dress, and poems. There are several fine full-page pictures, and the entire number is liberally illustrated. The publisher of the Fashion Bazar, George Munro, New York, claims for it "The largest circulation of any fashion magazine in the world," and it certainly leads in its line. The subscription price is only $3 per year; single number, 25 cents.

The Jenness-Miller Quarterly Journal will hereafter be merged in the Jenness-Miller Illustrated Quarterly. The Illustrated will be a 24-page journal having four columns of reading matter to the page, and original designs and drawings of Jenness-Miller styles not to be found in any other publication. It will have departments devoted to every possible home interest, and will have about three times the amount of reading matter hitherto contained in the Quarterly Journal, although its price will remain unchanged—20 cents per year, 5 cents per copy. It will be editorially conducted by Mrs. Jenness-Miller, and her unfinished story, the "Philosopher of Driftwood," will be printed in full during the next year, beginning with the September issue. There will be articles on fashion, fabrics, physical culture, the toilet, household recipes, the care of children, and every possible personal, home, business and club interest of women.

Some Books.

In No. 2 of Tucker's monthly library the publisher returns to his custom of printing books useful to his generation. "Russian Trails and Terrors" is a book of nine chapters, articles which were first published in the Fortnightly Review, and the name appended to the articles, E. B. Lanin, is a collective signature used by several writers. From the text one would judge all are, or have been, residents in Russia, and while the collected work is said to be "a faithful picture of the Russia of to-day," that is the more reason why the writers, if Russians, should remain unknown. The [illegible] Russian and Russia discussed in the book are: Lying, fatalism, sloth, dishonesty; "Russian Prisoners—the Simple Truth;" the absence of sexual morality; the Jews; the financial system, and its racking of the peasantry; the censorship of the press. Following the chapter on Russian prisons is given the fine ode their tyranny evoked from Swinburne, in which he demands—

[illegible] of heaven, and smite as fire from hell
Halls wherein men's torturers, crowned and cowering, dwell!
God or man, be swift; hope sickens with delay!
Smite, and send him howling down his father's way!
Down the way of Tsars, awhile in vain deferred,
[illegible] light the World."

This book should be read by every student of nations, by every lover of liberty and justice. Sold by the publisher. Benj. R. Tucker, Boston, Mass. In paper covers, 288 pages, 35 cents.

"The People's Horse, Cattle, Sheep and Swine Doctor" is a compendium of useful knowledge on the subjects indicated, edited by Wm. H. Clark; fully illustrated and issued in extra cloth binding, for $1, by the publisher, M. T. Richardson, 84-86 Reade street, New York. A book on diseases of domestic animals, with formulas for their treatment, so complete that the remedies may be applied by any one, is of a value to commend itself to those for whom it is prepared. Among the engravings are a series showing the shape of a horse's teeth at different ages.

The vast army of martyrs to lame feet are under obligations to the same publishers for a volume on "That Uncomfortable Shoe." This, too, is a practical book, compiled by a shoemaker who worked at the bench many years. It tells what makes the average shoe uncomfortable, and how the shoe should be made, and has a chapter on the care of the feet generally. After reading it one knows at least what kind of a shoe he ought to buy, and "then the next thing will be to find it." Paper covers, 25 cents.

In their cheap but neat and attractive 25-cent series, the Petersons issue good stories, printed from type that is large enough to make reading restful to the eyes. One of the latest in the series is "Xenie's Inheritance," from the French of Henry Greville. It is the story of a daughter's devotion to a mother; of a lover's error, its heroic expiation and final reward. Interesting throughout but never at the loss of its pure tone, the story is a refutation of the idea that the French novel is always, what it often is, too unclean to be read.

In the same series the Petersons are publishing in book form early stories written for their magazine by Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett. "Miss Crespigny," one of the best of these, is a late issue.

Notes.

Miss Edward's book on Egypt, "Pharaohs, Fellahs and Explorers," is now in the Harper's press.

The Petersons have in press "The Lost Colony," a story of love and adventure by James F. Raymond.

A serious of advertisement articles on the world's fair will begin in the September number of the North American Review.

The London Spectator calls Mr. Lowell "His Excellency the Ambassador of American Literature to the Court of Shakespeare."

Paul B. Du Chaillu, the traveler, is visiting Mr. Melville Philips, near Philadelphia, and is finishing his new book, "Ivar the Viking."

Morrina by Mme. Emilia Pardo-Bezan, which the Cassell Publishing company brings out, is said to be a coming sensation in literature.

Alice Longfellow, daughter of the poet, is a fine amateur photographer, and has made a specialty of storm pictures taken along the Massachusetts coast.

One of the most reliable society columns in New York is conducted by Mrs. Janet Chase Hoyt, daughter of the late Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase, and sister of Mrs. Kate Chase Sprague.

Mrs. Mona Caird, the originator of the controversy on the question "Is Marriage a Failure?" has written a new book which is to be called "A Romance of the Moors," the moors in question being those of Yorkshire lands, and not the wearer of turbans.

The young novelist, Jessie Fothergill, who died in London last month, was the daughter of a Manchester cotton manufacturer. She never had robust health and on that account was obliged to spend much of her time on the continent. She is best known by her third novel, "The First Violin."

The London correspondent of the Philadelphia Times says Mrs. Francis Hodgson Burnett is spending the summer quietly in a beautiful home at South Kensington and at Yorkshire sea coast. Since the death of her own "Little Lord Fauntleroy" her health has been broken, and her power for work much impaired. It is possible she will return to Washington for the winter.

SERVIA'S BOY KING.

Young King Alexander in Austria.

A Dreary Life Led by the Youthful Sovereign at the Capital at His Land.

Vienna, Aug. 12.—King Alexander, the boy ruler of Servia, who succeeded to the throne upon the abdication of King Milan, arrived here at a late hour Tuesday night from St. Petersburg, where he has been visiting the czar.

A large number of officials were awaiting him in the station, while outside a crowd numbering 10,000 persons gathered to get a view of the youthful ruler. Detachments of soldiery were drawn up around the station, and the king, upon his arrival, was received with full military honors.

King Alexander was attired in military uniform, and bore himself like a [illegible] for his age. He is of slight build, and his figure is erect. The manner in which he carries himself is good, and denotes his military training. In his face he bears a resemblance to both Queen Natalie, his mother, and to ex-King Milan, his father.

Notwithstanding the fact that recent dispatches from Belgrade announced that his majesty had passed a very successful examination in a great variety of subjects, it is asserted that in general respects his education is in a de[illegible] condition.

This is said to be due to the fact that his tutors are frequently changed for political reasons. He has been reared without companions of his own age and altogether, though he holds the position of a ruling sovereign of Europe, he is compelled to lead a dreary, lonely life. He will go to Ischl to-day and on Wednesday will proceed to Munich, the capital of Bavaria, where he will join his father. After spending a short time in Munich, ex-King Milan and King Alexander will go to Paris.

BLOODSHED ON A CRUISE.

Reported Duel Between Two New York Yachtsmen.

A Slur Cast at a Young Lady is Resented by Her French Cousin at Once.

Vineyard Haven, August 12.—If reports here are true the dueling code has been resorted to by members of the greatest yacht club in the country—the New York—whose fleet of vessels now lie to anchorage in this harbor.

Last Monday the fleet started for New York in what bid fair to be and is the most successful summer cruise in its history. No one dreamed of the tragedy which, if am correctly informed, bids fair to stain the escutcheon of the most popular yachting organization of the country.

When the squadron came to anchor Monday evening the first scene in a very tragic episode was enacted. On one of the prominent yachts of the squadron a very merry party sat at dinner. Champagne flowed freely and conversation was as unrestrained as the wine.

One of the gentlemen present made slurring remarks, it is reported, about a lady. A cousin of hers, a French gentleman of high connections, was present. His relation to the lady was not known to her libeler.

Without an instant's hestitation he sprang to his feet and knocked his gibtongued fellow-guest on the deck.

The man struck is prominent in New York club and social life, and is skilled as a swordsman, pistol shot and an athlete. He challenged the Frenchman to settle the dispute according to the code and the challenge was accepted. Seconds were chosen and it was agreed to go ashore early Tuesday morning and settle the matter by a duel with swords, which were on the yacht. Both men are experienced swordsmen, and, as cutlasses were the only weapons at hand, they were forced to decide to use them.

The next morning they put ashore at Glen Cove, accompanied by their seconds. The two principals fought stripped to the waist for the fray. It was seen at the start that the men were very evenly matched and each parried cleverly the onslaughts of his opponent.

After a short conflict, however, the Frenchman threw open his guard by an ill-advised stroke and was terribly injured by his opponent, who struck him a merciless blow, cutting into his right shoulder deeply and making a long, jagged wound, which extended down his chest.

At first it was thought that the Frenchman was fatally wounded. He fainted several times while he was being carried to the boat for conveyance to the yacht.

Doctors were summoned from New York and his wounds were dressed, and to prevent discovery of the occurrence he was kept aboard the yacht, the two doctors staying with him.

The physicians expressed the opinion that the Frenchman was very seriously wounded and might not recover.

When the squadron sailed from Glen Cove Tuesday afternoon the yacht on which this affair, in part, took place sailed with the fleet as if nothing unusual occurred. It is very probable that not half a dozen people know of this startling occurrence.

Poor Prospects Ahead.

Peoria, Ill., Aug. 12.—J. Finley Hoke, Peoria's noted forger, will be released from Joliet penitentiary next Friday between the hours of 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon, but the Merchants National bank of this city has caused warrants to be issued for his re-arrest. The Finley Hoke case has become one of world-wide renown from the fact that it was through it that the extradition treaties between the United States and Canada were established. There are still 19 charges against him.

PERSONAL BRAVERY.

Gen. Alger Relates an Incident of the War.

Last night a group of veterans of the late war, including General Alger, Judge Fitzgerald and Captain Seamans, of Los Angeles, sat in the corridor of the Palace and exchanged experiences, says the San Francisco Call.

"The question of personal bravery is always one of peculiar interest," said General Alger, "but many a man who bore the reputation of having a charmed life owed it to the admiration of his opponents. As a rule a soldier will never fire at a man who displays unusual courage. I know this from experience.

It was in the fall of '63 that I was transferred from the Army of the West to the command of a regiment in the Army of the Potomac. About that time the rebels moved across the Rapidan and I was sent to drive them back. It turned out that it was a reconnoissance, but at the time we believed they were seeking to make a lodgment on the mouth of the river. We drove them back to the bank of the stream, but there they made a savage stand, and re-enforcements were thrown over to aid them. Their position, owing to the formation of the ground, was a very strong one, and ours greatly exposed. While preparing for the struggle my attention was attracted by a courier approaching. He was on foot and availed himself of the numerous gullies, worn by the rains, to protect himself from the enemies' fire. Volley after volley was fired at him, but he reached me uninjured. He bore orders for me to report at once to General Kilpatrick. In order to reach the latter I would be compelled to pass over an almost open plain for fully three-quarters of a mile, and exposed to the fire of the rebels. It flashed upon me that the attempt would result in certain death, and I was on the point of refusing to obey when it occurred to me that I dared not display any indication of cowardice in the presence of my command. Leaving my horse and command, which were stationed behind a small rise in the ground, I started on foot. The moment I appeared I was greeted with a volley, and the dirt flew around me, but I was unhurt. At this the rebels cheered, and in a moment the shot flew thick about me for a second time, but not one touched me. There was another cheer from the rebels, and I kept going. I was so badly frightened that I dared not even look to the right or the left. Every moment I looked for another volley, and felt that I could not escape again. Not another shot was fired, and during the fifteen minutes that elapsed while I was in range of their guns and after round of cheers greeted me, but not a bullet was sent after me. I reached General Kilpatrick in safety, and from that day to this have sought unsuccessfully to ascertain the name of the rebel officer whose men spared my life."

SANATOR PLUMB.

He Is the Beck of His Party and Is [illegible]

Senator Plumb, in many of his characteristics and even in his giant frame, says the New York World, suggests to the observer here the late Senator Beck of Kentucky. The eminent Scotch-Kentuckian was a big man physically and [illegible] bluff, downright and sincere, and one of a staff of stenographers into a panic. He was an exceedingly ugly customer in debate. He was not exactly intolerant, but there were times when he had that air, and at all times the other fellow had good occasion to look out for himself.

Mr. Beck took his commission as senator seriously. What is called and what passes for society here [illegible] of him. He was not unsociable, for he loved his friends, had many of them and met them frequently. But teas and receptions were his abomination. He spent his time in the main looking after the business which his people had sent him here to transact for them. The consequence was he remained to the end of his life the greatest political power in the Blue Grass state.

Mr. Plumb is the Beck of his party, and has his party at home at his beck and call. He keeps his eyes open constantly for the interests of Kansas. Society takes up very little of his time. He is on the go from the hour he reaches town until the hour of his departure, and no point is overlooked during his stay. In the senate he bears a noteworthy and effective part in the debates, and when he takes the floor there is always attention given him.

The present leadership of his party is not at all to his liking, and he does not hesitate to say so. Nor does he approve of the extent to which Reed and McKinley carry their ideas of protection. Still he is a republican, and does his fighting within the party lines. He voted against the McKinley bill, but he afterwards supported his party's candidates who were running on a protection platform.

The Maharajah's Treasures.

India letter in the Philadelphia Press: We were taken to the old palace, in the heart of the city, to see the treasure-room. Two huge chests, carefully muzzled, used for hunting bucks, were on the palace steps. The regalia of Baroda is valued at £3,000,000. We were first shown the jewels worn by the maharajah on state occasions. These consist of a gorgeous collar of about 500 diamonds, some of them as big as walnuts, arranged in five rows, surrounded by a top and bottom row of emeralds of the same size; the pendant of a famous diamond called the "Star of the Deccan;" an aigrette to match is worn in the turban; then followed strings of pearls of perfect roundness, graduated from the size of a pea to that of a large marble, wondrous rings, necklaces, clusters of sapphires, and rubies as big as grapes. The greatest marvel of all is a carpet about 10x6 feet, made entirely of strings of pure and colored pearls, with great central and corner circles of diamonds. This carpet took three years in making and cost £300,000. This was one of Khande Rao's mad freaks, and was intended to be sent to Mecca to please a Mohammedan lady who had fascinated him, but the scandal of such a thing being done by a Hindoo prince was too serious and it never left Baroda. We were also taken to see two guns, weighing 280 pounds each, of solid gold, with two companions of silver, the ammunition-wagons, bullock-harness, and ramrods all being silver.

An Englishman's Historic Blunder.

A dramatic critic in a desultory conversation the other night said he wondered why Cinderella wore glass slippers, and he didn't believe anyone could dance in glass slippers. One man suggested that it was a fairy tale. Another man made everyone tired by talking of malleable glass. He remarked that he once saw a Pittsburg lady in a glass gown—he should have been ashamed to mention it any way. The manager, a distinguished Gallicist—he once went to school with Tartarin at Tarascon—said she never did wear glass slippers.

"You see," he explained. "Cinderella was indebted to a translator's mistake for her uncomfortable pumps. This delightful extravaganza was originally French, and the man who Englished it didn't know his business. The French words are pantoufles de vair—fur slippers. Now the word for glass is verre, and the English chump got 'em mixed up."—Chicago Tribune.

FOOD FOR GOURMANDS.

Chinese Methods of Cooking the Soft-Shell Turtle.

Penned Terrapin Farming May Prove a Failure—If it Does the Turtle May Answer the Purpose.

A recent despatch from Washington stated that, in the opinion of the fish commissioners, there was danger of the extinction of the terrapin, owing to the failure of artificial propagation.

The devout gourmet at first thought would be likely to read the announcement with a tinge of sadness, but when he recalled the unsatisfactory flavor of penned terrapin, great would be his joy at the failure of terrapin farming. This high Apician priest would, in all probability, be willing to sanction the extermination of the whole Emydae family if the supply of the future depended on terrapin enclosures.

In their struggles for freedom the prisoners rarely feed, because deprived of their natural food. They fret, and in their restlessness toughen their sinews and destroy their natural nutritive qualities. They often wear holes through their skin to the bone searching for a loophole through which to escape. In this condition they ar eunfit for food, and if sold in this market should come under the supervision of the health inspectors.

In the opinion of experts, catching terrapin out of season and penning them up until cold weather, is doing more to exterminate them than is the natural demand for them.

Tastes Very Different.

A penned terrapin, with the exception of the sores on its legs and the dry scaling off condition of the epidermic plates on the shield, caused by the feverish condition of the body, to the uninitiated looks like the fresh caught terrapin so far as general appearances are concerned. Expert buyers tell the difference at a glance, but the gourmet waits till they are placed before him to be eaten before he passes judgment; the first mouthful tells the story. From a gustatory standpoint there is much more difference in flavor between the trout of the wild mountain brook and those gormandized on liver.

Much as we might deplore the loss of this dainty, in this land of profusion, gourmets would quickly find an appropriate substitute. If not in the field of neglected food resources, certainly in the invention of new dishes from the already known food products. From the turtle and tortoise families alone may be made thousands of toothsome dishes unknown to the average mortal.

The green turtle or sea tortoise presents many possibilities other than the aldermanic soup. Stewed and served with a terrapin sauce it is quite acceptable; cut up small, cooked thoroughly, seasoned highly, pressed into forms and placed on ice, then sliced and served cold like headcheese, it forms a very agreeable hot weather dish if served with crisp lettuce.

Makes Your Mouth Water.

A very good fast day salad may be made of it, as also many other dishes, such as broiled en brochette, au gratin, stuffed, scalloped, en court bouillon, sauteed, Hamburg steak fashion, braisseed, a la creole, etc., together with the hundreds of appropriate sauces which may be served with a turtle stenk. These are but a few of the possibilities of this one variety of the family alone.

Perhaps one of the most delightful palate ravishing dishes which the writer has had the good fortune to sample was a baked green turtle. According to a recent traveler, this is one of the best dishes served in Cuba, and should be better known here.

The turtle is allowed to bleed thoroughly after cutting off the head; the whole turtle is then put into an oval pot or turbot kettle and boiled an hour. When cool the under shell or calipee is removed, the flus cleaned, the entrails removed, then the meat is cut up and sauteed with Spanish onion, sweet and pungent pepper and such other seasoning as may be desired. The meat is put into the back shell, well moistened and seasoned, then covered with a top crust and baked; when done a little sherry is added before sending the dish to table.

The soft shell turtle as an article of food is overlooked by purveyors, except the Chinese. These people cannot understand why a terrapin costs from $3 to $5 each when a snapping turtle or the soft shell may be purchased at times as low as 50 cents. The writer has eaten a soft shell turtle cooked by a Chinese cook, and pronounced it delicious. Yet we never see it on a New York bill of fare any more than we see snapper stew on a metropolitan menu. In Philadelphia, however, it is, and rightly so, the pride de resistance of the summer bill of fare. There are over one hundred different ways of preparing the snapper. The Philadelphia stew is made as follows:

Snap Turtle Stew.

Select a turtle weighing about ten pounds, allow it to swim in a tub of clean water half a day. Half fill a large boildr with water; when it boils drop the snapper into it. This is the quickest and best mode of killing; cutting his head off is apt to be attended with difficulties when attempted by amateurs. Boil 25 minutes, then plunge in cold water to cool. Remove the nails, scales and outer skin, turn it over and separate and remove the breast or lower shell. Remove the entrails carefully, saving the liver only; cut off the gall bag without breaking it; divide the remainder of the flesh in neat pieces, put them in a pot and add a gallon of water. Simmer four hours. Add salt to taste, a teaspoonful of whole pepper corns, a pinch of nutmet, the grated rind of a lemon, and a heaping table spoonful of dry mixed herbs. Five minutes before serving add a pint of sherry, a little cayenne and three hard boiled eggs chopped fine; cut a lemon in slices and add them and serve. Should the turtle contain eggs they may be served separately.

Carefully prepared and warmed up in a chafing dish as one would terrapin, the gourmet may find goodly fare in snapping turtle.

Even though the entire tortoise tribe were eaten up, there is the hellbender to fall back on. The homely creature was unquestionably made unattractive on purpose, or it would have been extinct long ago if ancient epicures were familiar with it. Take from us, if you will, the terrapin, oh! ye fish commissioner, but do not depopulate the island and streams of believers, for this muddy puppy of the muddy Ohio is more delectable fare than penned terrapin.—N. Y. Herald.

THE STROLLER ABOUT TOWN

Falls In With an Army of Ants,

Hears Something About Maurice Judd and Drops In on Canton Avenue.

Some of those who dropped into the Union Savings Bank, and were specially favored, were shown an interesting sight yesterday afternoon. Standing on one side of the bank and looking at the opposite wall one could see on the paper, if the light struck it right, a faint irregular line with many crooks and turns starting from the base board, extending up to the clock and changing its course downward, disappearing behind a desk about 20 feet from its starting point. From some points the line could not be seen, but when visible it looked as if it might have been caused by some irregularity in the plastering under the paper. On close inspection, however, it proved to be the track of an army of minute red ants that were running a sort of an overland route undoubtedly moving their eggs from an old nest to a new. Two lines of ants were in motion in opposite directions, one line loaded, the other coming back empty handed. For hours they kept up a steady march, never varying a hair's breadth from the track. They traveled in little groupes of 15 or 20 in Indian file, generally preceded by a lieutenant who stopped and touched heads with every ant going in an opposite direction, seemingly saying "How are you; you are on the right track; push onward." The curious thing about it all was that not a single ant left the strangely surveyed path, and how they stuck to it was a mystery.

A gentleman wet a piece of paper and placed it across the line of march. There was great confusion for a time. The ants would not go around but gathered in great numbers at the edge of the obstruction, and finally getting their bodies underneath gradually forced the paper from the wall and continued their march. The ants are still running on the same line this afternoon.

Ajeebe, the wonderful chess automaton, that has mystified New Yorkers for some time past, and although appearing to be nothing more or less than a clever piece of mechanism, has beaten at chess everybody who would play, among them some of the best experts of this country and Europe, has found its match in a Toledoan, Maurice Judd, the Summit street jeweler. Mr. Judd is one of the best chess players in the country, and his brilliant playing must have nonplussed the automaton. The figure Ajeebe represents a Turk sitting cross-legged on a cabinet with a chess board in his lap. Before the game commences the figure is opened and the interior, apparently filled with wires and mechanism, is shown. Then the cabinet underneath is exhibited and appears to contain nothing but machinery. Improbable as it seems, there is a man inside of Ajeebe, a very small man, a dwarf, who is a wonderful chess and checker player. He peers through the thin draperies over the chest of the image, and controls the movements of the arm, hand, head and body of Ajeebe. The chess automaton can be worked with an ordinary-sized man, who slips into the cabinet while the interior of the figure is being shown, and is in the figure when the cabinet door is opened. No one has ever set eyes on the little man on the inside, but in the vernacular of the day Mr. Judd saw him and went him one better.

A Bee lit his Havana and strolled, as was his wont, in the vicinity of Canton avenue to see what was going on in the dark side of a great city. Numerous pickaninies followed him at a respectable distance with their eyes fixed longingly on the fragrant butt. The scribe stopped, poised the cigar as if to throw it away, but didn't, and seated himself down on an empty soap box and meditatively eyed the score or more of embryo head waiters who had drawn near to be in the immediate vicinity when the butt struck terra firma. The scribe drew the cherubs closer and asked them their names and what they expected to be when they reached manhood. Fred Albert Johnson said he would be a barber, as did Harry Alexander Moss. Eugene Johnson Bell looked higher and was going to be a hostler. Jacob Thomas Smith turned over visions of colored posters in his mind, and decided that as he could "turn a flip flop the proper thing" for him to be was a circus actor. William Walter Jackson thought he was made for a minstrel man. Joseph Henry Thomas thought being a jockey would make him happy. Samuel James Lee took a very sensible view of things and said he was going to be a Jonah. Many other opinions were expressed and many eyes watched the Bee knock the ashes off his cigar and carefully wrap it in a piece of paper and put it in his pocket for future reference, as he walked away whistling "De Hoe Cake in de Pan."

CHOSE TO BE A BANDIT QUEEN,

But Love Reclaimed Her from a Wild Life in the Bush.

Three years ago Mrs. Wharton J. Anderson, a middle-aged woman of rare beauty, who is now spending a few weeks of her wedding tour with friends on Grand avenue, was the leader of a band of outlaws in Australia. Amassed over a quarter of a million dollars she want to t at will country, collected the band and placed herself at the head of it. Her object was not to steal, but to enable her, for the first time in her life, to have also lute y her own way in everything and make her will law. Her outlaws—for outlaws they certainly were—were paid to do her bidding, and to them she became known as "The Bandit Queen."

Up to the time she was 25 years of age she had never had her wisn in the slightest thing, and even her smallest wish was d nied. Left an orphan when but a year old, she was adopted by Major E. Thompson, a cruel, stern man who absolutely governed her as a man would an animal. A woman, he always declared, was simply a slave. About four years ago he died, leaving all his property to his adopted daughter.

When she found herself in possession of a fortune she knew at last that the aim of her life was reached. She converted everything into cash and went to Australia.

Gradually she gathered around her men who were well known in that country for fearlessness, and who lived on the proceeds of their unlawful acts. She finally collected a band of 30 members. Each she compelled to take an oath to obey her slightest wish. To each she paid a large monthly salary, and all they had to do to earn it was to obey her.

Mounted on the finest horses that could be procured, with the queen at the head, the band that was soon to become famous rode to the large wooden house that had purposely been erected in a secluded and most desolate spot. There they lived on every luxury that the season afforded. Dressed in dazzling costume the queen commanded them, and her most absurd order was instantly obeyed. She even went so far as to attempt to mould the men's thoughts.

Gradually it became known that a beautiful woman was the leader of a lawless band and the strange house became the sole topic of conversation. She was declared to be enormously rich and many weird stories were told about her. She never appeared in the towns or cities, and she was a mystery to all.

Many wealthy Englishmen heard of her and all desired to behold her. William Griffin, a young officer of the queen's army, who was stationed in Australia, became possessed of a strange idea that he must see the mysterious woman, who, Dame Rumor said, was remarkably beautiful. Securing a leave of absence he set out for her palace and after a weary journey he found himself within her grounds.

No sooner had he entered than he was seized by armed men and roughly rushed into the presence of the one he sought.

"You are my prisoner for three months," she said, "and for three months you must obey my wishes."

Each day she issued a written set of orders for the prisoner to execute, and his keepers saw that he obeyed the orders to a letter. Two hours each day he spent in her presence and listened silently to her as she told him of his many faults and the many reforms that would have to occur before he was liberated. He was to ride the wickedest of horses, perform daring feats he never before thought he was capable of, and sometimes he was compelled to work about the place.

When three months had gone by he was ushered into the leader's presence and after she compelled him to take an oath to respect all women for the remainder of his life he was escorted by mounted men about two miles from the place and set at liberty.

About nine months ago Wharton J. Anderson, a wealthy young Englishman who was traveling in Australia, heard of "The Bandit Queen" and determined to see her and find out if all the queer tales he had heard about her were true. With some difficulty he sought her out, and when he had entered the grounds he was seized, as others before him had been, and ushered into the leader's presence.

In the same way as Griffin was treated so was Anderson dealt with. He, however, rebelled and declined to either obey orders or listen to any directions whatever.

Of one thing he was positive. He knew that he loved this mysterious and beautiful woman, and he determined to make her his wife or die in the attempt. Somehow or other she acted strangely in his presence, and the end of it all was that love conquered.

Two weeks afterwards the home was deserted and the band had separated. Mabel Thompson, no longer "The Bandit Queen," was married to young Anderson in Sidney and they immediately sailed for America, landing in San Francisco a few months ago. They have been in St. Louis for nearly two weeks and expect to remain a month longer.—San Francisco Examiner.

BIG GUNS BUILT IN AMERICA.

Trial of a Breech-Loading 12-Inch Steel Rifle at Sandy Hook.

The first great breech-loading 12-inch steel rifle ever built in this country was fired for the first time on Friday at the Sandy Hook proving ground before a board of expert army officers. Capt. L. S. Bruff, "the father of the 12-inch gun," was there, too, and was delighted with the result of the test.

"It shows," said Capt. Bruff, who superintended every detail of the guns construction, "that we can now compete with the best European manufacturers. A Krupp gun of the same caliber can be fired a service charge of only 357 pounds, while ours can stand 440."

With a reduced charge of 250 pounds of German powder and a projectile weighing 1,000 pounds an initial velocity of 1,473 feet per second was attained, with a pressure of 20,000 pounds to the square inch. The range of the new gun under these conditions was five miles, so that it is fair to presume that with the ordinary service charge of 440 pounds a range of twelve miles or more will be reached.

The experts seemed to agree with Capt. Bruff that the question whether a heavy gun can be made in this country was settled. The tube, jacket and two of the forgings in a rough state were procured in France, but the borings were made and the jacket was shrunk on at Watervliet Foundry, Troy, N. Y., so the weapon is considered an American one. When its construction was begun there was no plant in America able to furnish the big steel forgings, but since that the Bethlehem (Pa.) Iron company's works have been enlarged, under ex-Lieut. William H. Jacques, and can now supply all the needed forgings. It will be principally with 12-inch guns that the sea coast will be defended, although a few guns of 16 inch calibre will be built to cope with the monsters belonging to European powers.

It costs Uncle Sam a good deal of money to thoroughly test this gun. Every fire, including powder, charge and projectile, costs from $160 to $200. As the regulations require three hundred or more shots before the range, penetrating power and durability can be ascertained, this experiment with the new gun will foot up about $50,000 for the war department to pay. It also costs quite a sum to transport such a gun from the foundry and put it in place.

There is, besides, at Sandy Hook a 12-inch mortar ready for trial. Nine 8-inch, five 10-inch and two 12-inch guns will be completed by the end of the year 1892. When the 16 inch gun is finished it will be tested at the proving ground, too. This monster will fire 1,000 pounds of powder and its projectile weighing a ton. It will be 49½ feet long and will weigh 125 tons. Its estimated muzzle penetration in iron is four feet, and its maximum range will be about 15 miles.—New York World.

THE EARTH'S INTERIOR.

Schemes in Congress to Bore Deep for the Precious Metals and Treasures Supposed to be Hidden There.

A scientific scheme of much importance has been agitated in Washington recently. During the last two congresses there have been a number of representatives and two or three senators who have used their influence in favor of an appropriation for boring a hole in the earth several miles in depth.

It has long been recognized that an inconceivable amount of value in the shape of precious metals and other mineral substances is locked up out of reach beneath the crust of this planet. All the riches dug out of it represent merely the most superficial and ineffective scratching of the surface.

Once render accessible the internal recesses of the sphere, and it is plain that every human being might be a thousand times a Monte Cristo.

Geologists are agreed that the interior of the earth is largely composed of metals. Whereas the surface matter of the planet weighs only about two and one-half times as much as water, it is known as a fact that toward the center the average weight of things is 11 times that of water. This is due to the circumstance that while this sublunary orb was cooling and condensing the heavier part cles sought the middle.

Therefore, it is probable that the great mass of the sphere is iron. But there are other metals more heavy than iron, and these presumably form an accumulation immediately about the center of the globe. Among them may be mentioned most importantly gold.

Geologist Gilbert, of the geological survey, said the other day that he would rather expect to find a vast accumulation of gold at that point than anywhere else, his notion being that such of the yellow metal as is found on the surface of the earth is only an accidental detritus.

However, there are two or three substances known even more weighty than gold, and one of them is platinum, which has doubled in market value within the last year or two, owing to the increased cost of production.

So it is not unreasonable that certain members of congress and other persons of keen judgment should consider the advisability of boring a hole in the earth for the purpose of extracting some of its metallic contents. For scientific purposes a pit has recently been sunk at Speling, in Germany, to the depth of a mile.

Unfortunately, water has been struck, and no results which add very materially to human knowledge have thus far been driven at Wheeling, W. Va., as far down as three-quarters of a mile. It is dry, and the boring process is proceeding at the rate of about ten feet a day.

The management will be disgusted if oil or something is not struck before the hole comes out at the antipodes and somebody tumbles into it at the other end.

No really scientific person has been so foolish as to imagine that possible results, commercially speaking, could be secured without digging much further than this. Estimate is made that at 20 miles from the surface of the earth, every known substance—metals, rocks and all—becomes fused and liquid.

Once let this point be reached, and naturally whatever is below must spout up of its own accord, without expense of mining, and a new age would dawn upon civilization.

It has been suggested that such an artificial conduit would be, to all intents and purposes, a volcano, but any danger which it would threaten might be obviated easily by establishing the works on an open prairie.—Washington Star.

It is said that the moonstone hoax ha made its appearance at the seashore res sorts. The method is so old and so well-known that it is a wonder to jewelers that it has survived to this time. The hunter for moonstones finds a white and almost transparent pebble. He takes it to a lapidary who is conveniently near by, who says it is a very fine moonstone, and that he will polish and finish it nicely for $1. The pebble is left to be polished, and at the time appointed the finder calls, pays the lapidary a dollar and receives a genuine moonstone which has cost the lapidary 40 cents. The lapidary has 60 cents profit, the finder has a real moonstone, and the beach has the pebble, which awaits the picking up by some other dupe.

The czar has a capacious, if not discriminating swallow, and when he drinks a "loving cup" the roasted apples, spices, lemon-peel and liquor are got away with at one cataract gulp, just as a man would pour a quart of mulled claret into a punch bowl.

KILLED BY TRAINS.

Deaf Mutes Have a Fascination for Walking on Railroad Tracks

"This makes 22 deaf persons that I have a record of who have been killed on railroad tracks since 1874," an old Erie locomotive engineer said, after reading the account of Homer J. Higbee, a deaf mute, being run over and killed while walking on the railroad at Olean, a few days ago. "Deaf people, and especially deaf mutes, seem to have a fascination for walking on railroad tracks and they invariably walk on the track on which trains are running in the same direction they are walking.

"In 1874 I had been running on an engine 10 years, and had never yet had the misfortune to kill anyone. I was working for a New Jersey railroad, and [illegible] warn a man off the track, as he was walking leisurely along ahead of me and the train was drawing perilously close to him. He paid no attention to the sig- [illegible] save a to him again, long, sharp and loud. He kept right on, and, as I was unable to stop the train, he was run over and killed. He was a well-known resident of Orange county, and a deaf mute. A relative of his told me that he had many times narrowly escaped being killed while walking on railroad tracks, and he seemed to have an irresistible passion for such dangerous pastime.

"Some time after I went on the Pennsylvania road, and inside of a year killed two men at different times, while they were walking on the track. Both were deaf and dumb. In 1876, during the centennial, I killed two other deaf persons who had the fatal fascination for railway track pedestrianism. Then I began to make a study of this queer habit of the deaf, and kept a record of all deaths of persons on railroad tracks that came to my notice through the newspapers if it was stated that the victims were deaf or deaf and dumb. I have cases from all over the country, and this killing of Deaf Mute Higbee at Olean makes the 22nd. They are invariably killed in the same way.

"A deaf mute was never known to look back while walking on a railroad track, and he is generally discovered in places where it is almost an impossibility to stop in time to save him. The air brakes have saved a good many deaf railroad pedestrians since they came into use. It is an old saying among railroad men that a deaf and dumb person will go two miles out of his way to walk on a railroad track, and it isn't far from the truth. I would like to have some one give some explanation of this strange phase of afflicted human nature. There is no doubt whatever of its existence."—N. Y. Sun.

Greeley's First Meeting with Lincoln

About 1868, Horace Greely wrote a remarkable address on Abraham Lincoln which it is believed was never delivered. The MS. came into the possession of a former editor of the Tribune, and is now first published in the July Century under the title, "Greely's Estimate of Lincoln." Of Lincoln, the congressman, Mr. Greeley says:

"I first met Mr. Lincoln late in 1848 at Washington, as a representative in the Thirtieth Congress—the only one to which he was ever elected. His was, as apportioned under the census of 1840, a Whig district; and he was elected from it in 1846 by the largest majority it ever gave any one. He was then not quite forty years old; a genial, cheerful, rather comely man, noticeably tall, and the only Whig from Illinois—not remarkable otherwise, to the best of my recollections. He was generally liked on our side of the house; he made two or three moderate and sensible speeches which attracted little attention; he voted generally to forbid the introduction of slavery into the still untainted territories; but he did not vote for Mr. Galt's resolve looking to the immediate abolition of slavery in the federal district, being deterred by the somewhat fiery preamble thereto. He introduced a counter proposition of his own, looking to abolition by a vote of the people—but it was by the whites of the district—which seemed to me much like submitting to the votes of the inmates of a penitentiary a proposition to double the length of their respective terms of imprisonment. In short, he was one of the very mildest type of Wilmot proviso whigs from the free states—not nearly so pronounced as many who long since found a congenial rest in the ranks of the pro-slavery democracy. But as I had made most of the members my enemies at an early stage of that short session, by printing an elucidated expose of the iniquities of congressional mileage; and as he did not join the active cabal against me, though his mileage figured conspicuously and by no means flatteringly in that expose. I parted from him at the close of the congress with none but grateful recollections. There were men accounted abler on our side of the house—such as Collamer, of Vermont; Palfrey, and Mann, of Massachusetts, and perhaps Schenck and Root, of Ohio—yet I judge that no other was more generally liked and esteemed than he. And yet had each of us been required to name the man among us who would first attain the presidency, I doubt whether five of us would have designated Abraham Lincoln."

Ammonia as a Motive Power.

A most successful test was made on Friday of the use of ammonia as a motive power to displace steam. The test was the first that has ever been made on a marine engine, and the trial was most satisfactory. An ammonia-engine plant has been fitted on the tug E. W. Hartley, which made a trip up and down the river subjecting the new scheme to a practical test. It is known as the Campbell ammonia-engine system, and its workings are novel and interesting, not only to the mechanical and scientific circles, but also to the layman of the industrial world.

Any ordinary engine can be converted into a Campbell ammonia engine simply by the addition of a "generator," which is much like a boiler. Steam is used simply for the purposes of heating the aqua ammonia in the generator. The heated ammonia expels a gas, leaving a weak solution of ammonia in the bottom of this boiler-like affair. When, by raising the temperature of the ammonia, sufficient power is generated, the throttle valve is opened and the gas passes into the cylinder of the engine and propels the piston rod in every way the same as steam. It is here exhausted the same as steam, but at this point the gas is cooled and conducted back to the generator. Before it reaches the latter vessel it is carried by a "spray coil" to a point where the gas comes in contact with the ammonia solution which has been rejected from the generator, and here the solution is recharged by absorption and by the natural affinity existing between water and ammonia.

By this means the same body of ammonia is used constantly, exhausting itself only to be recharged with new life and to be returned to the generator. The same is true of the water used. The steam in the generator imparts its heat to the ammonia, and is thereby condensed and carried back to the boiler to be used again. In the ammonia engine there is absolutely no waste. On the other hand, there is a saving of coal, as the engine can be operated on one-half the amount of fuel. On the Hartley yesterday only one of the two furnaces was used, and there was all the speed and pressure that could be desired.

Evarts' Ready Retort.

Senator William Maxwell Evarts is known in Washington as being the most dilatory man in congress, and many amusing instances have occurred through his habit of procrastination. Long after the Christmas recess last winter no meeting of the senate committee on library, of which he was chairman, has been called, which fact caused considerable surprise among the other members of the committee.

Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, was one of them, and while he was sitting on a sofa in the cloakroom one day conversing with Senator Frye, of Maine, along walked Mr. Evarts in deep thought, with bowed head and hands clasped behind his back. Said Senator Hoar:

"Evarts, I wish that when you do call a meeting of the library committee that you would have the extreme kindness to notify my executors of the fact."

Senator Evarts just stopped in his walk long enough on hearing this to say in his driest tones:

"Senator Hoar, allow me to assure you that nothing would afford me greater pleasure."

It is needless to state that Senator Hoar did not again remind Mr. Evarts of his neglect to order a meeting of the senate committee on library.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Hot weather nowadays. Let us have a conversational discussion hoped to be untiring to you and us. We'll talk first. You come to our office and say your part. The economy of every-day life as well as the dictates of common sense, not only suggest but demand, that if you are a man of family you should own a spot of land with a house and perhaps a mortgage on it. If you are not a man of family it applies equally as well, for you know not when you may enter that blissful state.

There are few men who cannot afford to own a home with the liberal terms offered them by honest Real Estate dealers, who manipulate building lots and the building of houses and arrange a series of easy payments extremely liberal to the buyer and profitable to the seller. PRINCES IN ECSTACIES OF DELIGHT

The Royal Family of Great Britain Astounded and Charmed.

Their Royal Highness the Prince and Princess of Wales, Princess Beatrice, Princess Alice, Princess Louise, Marquis of Lorne, Prince George of Wales, Duke and Duchess of Fife, Princesses Maud and Victoria of Wales, Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone, the Dowager of Roxburg, Lady Collins, Lady Biddulph, Lord Chief Justice Coleridge, Lord Mayor Isaacs, Sir Robert Collins, in fact all the royal family of Great Britain, princes of the blood, dukes, earls, lords, barons, generals, judges, the clergy, members of parliament, and nearly every prominent individual in London paid frequent visits to Barnum and Bailey's greatest show on earth, when exhibiting in London last winter. All the above distinguished people publicly expressed themselves astonished at the magnitude and wealth of novelty in this monster show. Few can realize to what immense proportions the Barnum and Bailey show has attained. With "Nero, or the Destruction of Rome," added this season the entertainment numbers over 1,200 performers. Only think of it! The main stage when the spectacle is exhibited is 450 feet long and fully 300 expert ballet dancers, selected in France, Italy, Portugal, Germany, Spain, England and other countries, are seen at times. The circus, hippodromes, menageries, horse fair, and other departments are even larger than ever before, so that it is beyond question the most colossal exhibition ever dreamed of by mortal man. No other exhibition of any kind or description was ever patronized by such distinguished audiences as those visiting this show in London. What was daily became wildly enthusiastic over—the whole of it undivided and entire will be here on Saturday, August 15, with the great new street parade in the morning.

INTERESTING TO TOURISTS.

Great Volume of Travel Both North and South.

The large steamers of the Detroit and Cleveland and Lake Superior transit lines to Mackinac, "The Soo," and Duluth continue to be set thronged with tourists that it is necessary to order state-rooms several days before starting to secure them. The prospect of increased hot weather will undoubtedly create still greater demand for steamboat accommodations. The elegant new English steamer Campana, running to Kingston, the Thousand Islands and Montreal, is also attracting large patronage, and Mr. S. Canfield, who is agent for all these lines, as well as some others, is kept very busy these days furnishing tickets and state rooms for the numerous applicants, for the fact that he is agent of the Star-Cole steamer Idlewild, running to Detroit and connecting with all the other lines referred to, enables him to offer many advantages to travelers.

Spanish Creoles.

They present a restful contrast to their American sisters. While the American woman labors to push herself socially beyond whatever position she may have been placed in, chafes over domestic occurrences, has spasms of despair over her failure to find a mission, bemoans her small value as a factor of the world, the Spanish woman knows, or at least recognizes, no social scale.

Whether her friend sells cigars, or is in the commission business, he is her friend, and is endowed with ideal rank. He is, like herself, an exile from the kingdom of "the what-might-have-been."

A laugh greets the daily mistakes in domestic service, which form the burden of the American woman's complaint; she has her mission from her birth—to be a true friend, wife and mother.

She floats down the stream of time; the American swims. She dances through life to the accompaniment of jests and compliments; the American marches through it to martial music.

She has no end in view; all thought is for the present moment; the American lives to leave an impress on her time. The Spaniard reaches an end; the American a destination; death comes after ease no less than after struggle.

George Eliot said that God made women to match the men, so that it rarely happens that even in the south the Spanish woman marries the American man.

The Spanish man cannot be taken too seriously, the American woman cannot be taken lightly; a balance of power is struck, and the nationalities live side by side in harmony, separated by a stream of deep individuality.

Our Old Fire Company.

"That was a gay old company that we belonged to, Joe, away back in '68, when you and I 'ran with the machine.' Do you remember that big fire in Hotel Row, one freezing night, when fifteen people were pulled out of their burning rooms and came down the ladder in their burning night clothes; and how 'Dick' Greene brought down two 'kids' at once—one in his arms, the other slung to his back? Poor Dick! He got the catarrh dreadfully from so much exposure, and suffered from it five years or more. We thought once he was going in consumption, sure. But, finally, he heard of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and tried it, and it cured him as sound as a flint. I tell you, Joe, that catarrh remedy is a great thing. It saved as good a man and as brave a fireman as ever trod shoe leather."

Benefiting the World.

To help humanity reach a higher standard of health, morality or prosperity, is indeed, benefiting the world. Rev. M. E. Slots, Pastor of M. E. Church East, Springfield, Ohio, speaks as follows of a means of improving the health of children: "Touching the use of Dr. Hand's Remedies for children, I cheerfully state that we found them to be the most effectual remedy for bowel complaints in children we ever used in our family." The change of season may affect your child when you will want a remedy to check the wasting disease and to build up the system. Dr. Hand's Diarrhœa Mixture and his General Tonic—25 cents each, will do the work. Try them.

How's Your Liver?

A very unnecessary question to ask a man whose skin and eyeballs are saffron-tinted. Of course his tongue, too, is furred, bowels constipated, head bothered with aches, right rib region pained with constant uneasy sensations. These you may take for granted, although he may not particularize them, because they are among the invariable accompaniments of liver trouble. Are they chronic? If so, you may be sure he does not, as he ought to do, take Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the leading regulator of livers that are out of order. Commend it to him as highly as you please, you can't say a word too much in his behalf. Sick headaches, constipation, nausea, dyspepsia and the yellow hue of the skin speedily depart when this reliable corrective is resorted to. Malaria, rheumatism and la grippe are also among maladies which it remedies and prevents. A wineglassful three times a day confers appetite and digestion.
